EXPECT THIS WEEK TO MAKE HISTORY IN LIBERTY LOANS

Campaign Managers Prepare for Heavy Subscriptions, But Will Drive to Exceed Quota.

BRAZIL DAY AT THE ALTAR

EAST SIDE IS HARD AT WORK

Mothers of Men Who Have Gone to the Front Hold Patriotic Meeting There.

Although no figures are available, yesterday, the second day of the energetic drive for subscriptions to the Nation's Six-Billion-Dollar Liberty Loan was productive of encouraging results. Being Sunday and a day of rest, it afforded an opportunity for meditation over the great world war, to which more than 1,750,0000 American troops have already been sent, whose ultimate victory is dependent upon the success of this country to raise the funds required for feeding, clothing, and supplying them with ample ammunition to overcome the enemy.

Officials of the Liberty Loan Committee for this district are looking forward to this week as one that will set a new record in Liberty Loan campaigns. They were making preparations yesterday for an exhibition of patriotism backed by dollars, beginning today, that will be as convincing an argument to the enemy as are the blows he is receiving from the American Army in France.

The great showing of Saturday—$200,000,000 of subscriptions on the opening day—is a source of pride to the campaign managers. But this is now the time for real work, they realize, with the parades and opening celebration over, and, while they expect agreeable surprises in reports from all parts of the district, they will settle down in earnest today and do not expect to let down in their drive for a minute until the district's quota of $1,800,000,000 has been subscribed and oversubscribed.

New Yorkers who attended church services were reminded by their pastors of their duty to subscribe generously to the new loan; and the thousands who walked the principal thoroughfares were appealed to by countless posters and pictorial displays, all of which are designed to arouse the patriotic fervor of the people and to convince them of their duty to buy bonds.

Program for Today.

The Altar of Liberty in Madison Square, which was dedicated on Saturday by Vice President Marshall and the Belgian Minister, was the centre of a Liberty Loan rally with Domicio de Gama, the Brazilian Ambassador, as the chief speaker. Today British Day will be observed at the altar. Sir Henry Babington Smith, Acting British High Commissioner, in the absence of the Earl of Reading, who is abroad, will speak. Two hundred British marines and sailors will take part in the parade before and after the ceremonies at noon.

Governor Whitman will speak at a Liberty Loan meeting at the Sub-Treasury at noon. There will be other speeches, among them one by James A. Britton of the Canadian Army. Lucien Muratore will sing.

This evening a concert will be given in Carnegie Hall under the auspices of the Allied Music Division of the Liberty Loan Committee, at which Galli-Curci, Caruso, and Jascha Heifetz will take part. Governor Strong of the Federal Reserve Bank will preside, and Job E. Hedges will deliver an address.

Tickets to the concert are supplied free to those who file Liberty Loan subscriptions through the Allied Music Division, with offices at 105 West Fortieth Street. This committee has already received bond applications amounting to more than $2,000,000, and before this evening it is expected that the total will reach at least $3,000,000.

Sir John Foster-Fraser, who has been sent to this country as the personal representative of Premier Lloyd George of England to aid in the campaign, will speak at 5 o'clock this afternoon at the

HAVRE, France, Sept. 29.—In addressing the Belgian Army before its attack Saturday morning, King Albert asked his soldiers to drive the enemy from the Belgian coast with the help of their French and British comrades.

"This is the decisive hour," said the King. "Everywhere Germany falls back. Be worthy of the sacred cause of our independence and the traditions of our race. Forward for right and liberty and for glorious and immortal Belgium!"

GERMANY RETIRING FROM RUMANIA

PEACE ENVOYS AT SALONIKI

PARIS, Sept. 29.—The German forces of occupation in Rumania began to retire from that country Friday, according to information received in Swiss political circles. There are persistent rumors in Switzerland that the Rumanian population has revolted. The German civil authorities are said to be removing their archives hastily.

The Bulgarian delegates who are to discuss an armistice and probable peace arrangements with the allied Governments arrived at Saloniki Saturday. The delegates are General Lonkoff, commander of the Bulgarian Second Army; M. Liapcheff, Finance Minister, and M. Radeff, a former member of the Bulgarian Cabinet.

A Sofia dispatch by way of Zurich says the attitude of the Socialist Party was one of the decisive factors in the decision taken by King Ferdinand and his Ministers. The Central Committee of the party on Sept. 22 called upon Premier Malinoff to open parleys for peace with the Allies. They were joined in their request by the Agrarians. Manifestations of hostility to the dynasty took place in Sofia and other places. In some instances troops joined in the outbreaks.

Uneasiness over the Bulgarian situation is increasing in Germany and Austria. Germany is endeavoring to persuade General Todoroff, Chief of the Bulgarian Staff, to throw his influence to her side.

Vienna newspapers believe that the political reaction in Bulgaria will result in an Austrian retirement in Albania. Disorders are reported to have occurred in Vienna.

May be Race for Sofia.

LONDON, Sept. 29.—Germany will not let Bulgaria make peace if she can prevent it by force or persuasion. She is trying to rush reinforcements to Bulgaria. One German report says heavy contingents are on their way and will show themselves in Sofia to reassure the people of the Bulgar capital. There may be a race between the German Army and the Allies to reach Sofia. Germany is supposed to have six divisions in Rumania, which she may be able to send. She hardly can withdraw troops from the western

In Three Days Our Men Cut Through Defenses That Had Stood for Four Years.

WIRE ZONE 2½ MILES DEEP

Maze of Trenches, Concrete, Masonry and Traps Conquered in Face of Machine Guns

By EDWIN L. JAMES.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY, Sept. 29.—After a three days' struggle through mile after mile of seemingly insuperable barriers, constituting the Germans' formidable defense of masonry, steel, wire and pitfalls, the First American Army today is fighting on in the rain to the fourth and last line of those defenses known as Kriemhilde-Stelling. At Brieulles they are within two kilometers of it and at Exermont about five and a half kilometers.

This means that this line is under easy fire of all our artillery. This defense runs through the Argonne Forest, along the Aire Valley through Grandpré and crosses the Meuse below Dun. Since the Americans hit the Hinderburg line on Thursday morning the Germans have been feverously at work on this Kriemhilde line. To cross the Kriemhilde-Stellung lines does not necessarily mean that the Americans will go ahead faster, but it does mean that they will have nearer an even match with the Germans, and their advance will depend on the Germans' resistance.

In the last three days our obstacles have been more the old German defenses than boche fighters.

Much has been written about the Hindenburg defenses, but one must see them to realize what the Americans had to go through.

In a Wilderness of Wire.

I have spent the day exploring a part of what beyond doubt is the greatest piece of military defense work the world ever saw. There is nothing to compare to it, because there never was anything like it. For instance, in Argonne Forest the Americans had to cut their way through a zone of barbed wire two and a half miles, through wire nailed to trees through the forest and reaching sometimes ten feet high. This wire ran in every direction and often was hidden in the underbrush. Other underbrush held hidden entrapments and ordinary trench wire. In this two-and-a-half-mile zone there were innumerable trenches, forming three distinct systems, and between them and over

Allies' 3 Days' Bag of Germans 40,000; 200,000 Since July 18

PARIS, Sept. 29.—French, British, American, and Belgian troops in the last three days have captured 40,000 prisoners and 300 guns, it is estimated here.

Since July 18 the Allies have captured 200,000 prisoners, 3,000 guns, 20,000 machine guns, and enormous quantities of material.

This does not take into account the operations in Macedonia and Palestine.

REPRISAL THREAT OVER SHOTGUNS

WILL EXECUTE PRISONERS

State Department Defends Use and Will Warn Germany of Counter-Reprisals Here.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 29. — Germany, through the Swiss Legation, has sent an ultimatum to the Government of the United States that if no satisfactory answer is forthcoming by Oct. 1 to the German protest about the use of shotguns by American soldiers "reprisals will be taken."

A semi-official telegram from Berlin gives the following additional details of the note:

"From prisoners captured during a skirmish between patrols on July 27, a repeating shotgun was taken. The prisoners, who belonged to an American infantry regiment, 307th of the 77th Division, stated their patrol possessed three such guns, each loaded with six cartridges and each cartridge containing nine shots of size 00.

"Another shotgun was captured on Sept. 11 from the 3d Infantry Regiment of the 55th American Division.

"The use of such weapons is forbidden by the Hague convention as causing unnecessary suffering. The German Government protests energetically, and expects from the United States Government that steps will be taken immediately to discontinue the employment of shotguns.

"It is pointed out to the Government of the United States that a prisoner on whom a shotgun or shotgun ammunition is found forfeits his life."

Will Threaten Counter-Reprisals.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 29.—"Two can play at that game," will be in effect the American Government's rejoinder to the German Government's threat of reprisal against American soldiers unless a satisfactory answer in regard to the use of repeating shotguns by American soldiers in France is received by Oct. 1—next Tuesday.

This threat of reprisal was conveyed to the Washington Government through the Swiss Government. The answer to Berlin will be sent by the State Department, and will challenge the right of Germany to take the lives of any American soldiers captured with shotguns. The position of the American Government will be:

First—The use of shotguns will be continued wherever and whenever considered necessary to the military operations of the United States.

Second—There is nothing in the Hague conventions forbidding the use of shotguns in war, and the American Government is well within the rights accorded under the rules of civilized warfare in using shotguns.

Third—The American Government denies the right of the German Government to adopt the principle that reprisals occasioning physical suffering are necessary to enforce the demands from one belligerent to another.

Fourth—Any such reprisal by the German Government will invite similar reciprocal action on the part of the United States.

The keynote of the American reply will be the same as that sounded by Secretary Lansing in his rejoinder of last April to the note verbale from the German Government in the case of Captain-Lieutenant Rintelen. In that note Germany said one Siegfried Paul London, who claimed to be an American citizen, had been condemned to death by court-martial at Warsaw for "war treason" as a spy, and if the United States Government set Rintelen free the Berlin Government would deliver London in exchange for him. The German Government pointed out that its efforts to obtain the release of Rintelen had failed and asserted:

"In order to lend greater emphasis to the protests which have been lodged with the American Government, the German Government contemplates some appropriate measures of reprisal."

American Position Plain.

This threat of reprisal failed to move the American Government to release Rintelen or to interfere with the due

PUSH ON IN CHAMPAGNE

Against Heavy Resistance They Gain West of the Argonne Toward Vouziers.

THRUST NORTH OF LA FERE

Fresh Attacks Win Vital Ground and Result in Capture of 500 Prisoners.

LONDON, Sept. 29.—The French line on the Chemin Des Dames has been advanced two miles, and the highest point, commanding practically the whole ridge, is in the possession of the French.

FRENCH HEADQUARTERS ON THE AISNE, Sept. 28, (Reuter.)—The Germans have begun a retirement from the important Laffaux-Malmaison Plateau, from which the Chemin des Dames runs eastward to Craonne and the sources of the Ailette.

As the result of General Mangin's advance today the entire Malmaison Plateau and the western end of the Chemin des Dames for about 1,500 yards are in possession of the French.

After fighting desperately for weeks to retain the approaches to the massif of St. Gobian and Laon, the enemy is abandoning them. This group of heights for four years has formed the central pillar of the German line in France. The strategy of Marshal Foch compelled the enemy, as it did on the Marne, to withdraw his centre before the allied attacks to the north and the east and forced him to move back on the wings. The retreat is one of the first direct results of the French, American, and British offensives of the last three days.

Official Report of French Victories.

PARIS, Sept. 29.—French successes south of St. Quentin, on the Chemin des Dames, and in Champagne are thus summarized in the night official report:

Overcoming vigorous resistance, the French captured Urvillers and Cerizy, south of St. Quentin, and crossed the St. Quentin-La Fère Road. Five hundred prisoners have been counted.

Between the Ailette and Aisne the French advanced about two kilometers on both sides of the Chemin des Dames and occupied Pargny-Filain and Ostel.

On the Champagne front the French obtained important results, carrying Bouconville, Mont Cuvelet, and Sechault, and advanced two kilometers in the direction of Challerange.

Farther west the French carried Ardeuil, Montfaux-Elles, and Vieux, and reached the outskirts of Aure. On the left they entered Ste. Marie-à-Py.

The text of the day statement reads:

North of the Aisne the pursuit of the enemy continued during the night. The French occupied the Forest of Pinon, and reached the Ailette in that region and also east of Chavingnon. On the sector between Ostel and Chavonne [just north of the Aisne] the enemy made strong resistance against the advance of our troops.

On the Champagne front violent attacks were launched by the Germans yesterday, but they were broken up. The French troops resumed their progress, especially northeast of Gratreuil, where they captured the heights of Bellevue.

Following is the text of the French Saturday night report:

Our repeated attacks in the plateau north of the Aisne finally forced the enemy to retire toward the Ailette River.

East of the line of Allemont and Jouy, pursuing the German rearguards, we occupied the village and

LONDON, Sept. 29.—In his official report tonight to the War Office, Field Marshal Haig has this to say of the participation of American troops in today's new advance:

Further north at the same hour (5:50 A. M.) troops from New York State, Tennessee, and North and South Carolina, under command of Major Gen. G. W. Read, U. S. A., attacked the Hindenburg lines on a front of 5,000 yards where the Scheldt Canal passes through the tunnel.

With great dash the American troops pressed forward against these defenses and on the right captured Bellicourt and Nauroy.

General Read was recently appointed commander of the 4th Corps of Pershing's army. The forces originally assigned to him contained no New York, North Carolina, South Carolina, or Tennessee troops.

DIXMUDE TAKEN FROM FOE

Five Other Towns, Including Passchendaele, Overrun as Victors Sweep On.

LONDON, Sept. 29.—Dixmude has been captured by the Belgian troops, it was officially announced tonight.

The Belgians have also taken Zerrem (Zarren?), Stadenberg, Paschendaele, Moorslede, and part of Westroosebeke. This means an advance of several miles.

After breaking up a violent enemy counterattack the Belgians captured Terreest Height, and at the close of the day had advanced to within less than two miles of Roulers.

The prisoners taken since yesterday exceed 5,500. More than 100 guns and numerous machine guns and bomb-throwers and much war material have been captured.

'Spotted' for British Monitors—Destroyed 4 German Planes, Lost 13.

LONDON, Sept. 29.—"The air force with the navy, co-operating in the Belgian offensive yesterday, dropped thirteen tons of bombs and set fire to two trains and several ammunition dumps," says an Admiralty statement issued tonight. "Massed motor transports and a hostile battery were attacked and casualties inflicted. The airmen engaged also in spotting for the monitors shelling the German coast defenses.

"The latter part of the day large formations of hostile aircraft working inside the enemy lines were encountered. Four planes were destroyed and four were brought down out of control. Thirteen of our machines are missing. A majority of them failed to return from the enemy lines after a sudden and violent rainstorm."

GREAT BATTLE IN MIST

Smoke Screens Aid Fog to Hide Vast Movements of Tanks and Infantry.

By PHILIP GIBBS.

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES IN FRANCE, Sept. 29. — The British progress all along the line from the Arras-Cambrai road down to the neighborhood of La Vacquerie continued yesterday with hard fighting opposite our Third Army front, and this morning the Fourth Army, south of that battle area, delivered an attack on a wide front, extending the zone of conflict across the Canal de Lescaut north of St. Quentin and breaking through that part of the Hindenburg line with its most formidable defenses.

This new attack began with the morning in a dense fog. It was so thick that when I went up to Leverguier, the ground of which looks straight across the canal, I could not see the length of a gun team ahead. The frost of the night was evaporated by the sun, which rose brightly above this ground mist, and made a thick white haze which was filled with smoke of the guns and smoke screen put up to hide the movement of our tanks and infantry.

It produced a weird effect such as I had never seen in this war. Bodies of men were moving in close array following up the first assault columns, but they could only be seen as through a glass, darkly, and no man was visible twenty paces ahead. Gun transports and batteries moved up the tracks toward the canal crossing, at Bellenglise, and as the mist shifted for a moment one saw them as ghost figures of men and beasts, and then a minute later they disappeared and one seemed in utter loneliness except for the sound of wheels going over the rough ground and the tramp of horses' hoofs and the march of men.

Everywhere hidden in this fog were the guns. They were in sunken roads and infolds of fields and out in the open country and under cover of woods, but one could see nothing of them, not even a flash of them, but hear only their vast tumult of fire and rush of shells overhead, then something very horrible. In this darkness and noise it was as though an infernal nightmare were let loose around me. It was impossible to know one's whereabouts or gauge one's risk of hostile fire.

Immense shell craters in one patch of ground near one's position at the moment showed that the German guns had marked down this place, and that their shells had furrowed there a little while before being blind. One listened, and there was a sense of reassurance, because only rarely did one hear the whine of hostile shells or the snarl of German shrapnel. All shells but a few were going one way,

ENGLISH SWIM A CANAL

LONDON, Sept. 29.—In a great new offensive on the thirty-mile front from St. Quentin to the Sensée River, north of St. Quentin, the forces under Field Marshal Haig, including Americans, made a notable advance today.

Troops from the States of New York, Tennessee, and North and South Carolina attacked the Hindenburg line on a front of nearly three miles today, capturing Bellicourt and Nauroy.

This announcement was made by Field Marshal Haig in his report from headquarters tonight.

An English division crossed the Scheldt Canal on lifebelts, mats, rafts, and improvised bridges and stormed the main Hindenburg defenses around Bellenglise [five miles northwest of St. Quentin] and captured the whole German position.

The 63d Naval Division has reached the southern outskirts of Cambrai. The Canadians are in the outskirts on the northwest.

Haig Tells of Thirty-Mile Attack.

LONDON, Sept. 29.—Today's British and American victory is thus described in tonight's official report:

At dawn this morning the battle was successfully developed southward to the neighborhood of St. Quentin. It now extends over a front of nearly thirty miles from that town to the Sensee River north of Cambrai.

On the extreme right the 20th Corps launched an attack at 5:30 A. M. across the Scheldt Canal from Bellenglise, inclusive, northward. The 46th North Midland Division, provided with life belts, mats, portable bridging material and rafts, and under cover of a concentrated artillery and machine gun fire, stormed the main Hindenburg defenses, which here run along the eastern bank of the canal.

Notwithstanding the depth of the water, the breadth of the canal, and the strength of the enemy's defenses, which included the village of Bellenglise and numerous tunnels and concrete works, this division succeeded in capturing the whole German position opposed to them. They then pressed forward with great bravery and determination up the slopes of the hills beyond the canal, taking many prisoners in the course of their advance.

Bellenglise, Lehaucourt and Magny la Fosse are now in our possession.

In conjunction with this brilliant operation other English troops advanced in the bend of the canal south of Bellenglise, covering the southern flank of the division.

Further north at the same hour troops from New York State, Tennessee, and North and South Carolina under command of Major Gen. G. W. Read, U. S. A., attacked the Hindenburg lines on a front of 5,000 yards where the Scheldt Canal passes through the tunnel.

With great dash the American troops pressed forward against these defenses, and on the right captured Bellicourt and Nauroy.

On the left bank fighting is taking place in the neighborhood of Bony.

In the centre of our attack English troops captured Villers-Guislain. New Zealand troops cleared the Welsh Ridge, breaking up a hostile counter-attack, and, pushing on, captured La Vacquerie and the spur leading from Bonavis to Masnières.

Meanwhile the 69th Division, having secured crossings of the Scheldt Canal, continued to advance. After fighting in the western outskirts of Masnières and Les Rues Vertes, they captured both of these villages and carried the defensive system covering

Battleship Minnesota Hits Mine, Keeps Afloat; No Known Casualties

WASHINGTON, Sept. 29.—The battleship Minnesota struck a mine off the Delaware Breakwater this morning. No casualties have been reported. The ship is steaming to port under her own power. The Navy Department issued the following statement tonight:

The Navy Department is informed that the battleship Minnesota struck a mine early this morning off the Delaware Breakwater. There were no casualties, according to reports reaching the department, and the Minnesota is proceeding to port under her own power.

There was no indication as to the extent of the damage to the battleship or whether the mine was an enemy one. However, naval officers recalled that mines were laid in these waters by the submarines which carried out the first raids off the Atlantic Coast last May and June, and that the oil tank steamer Herbert L. Pratt was sunk by striking one of them.

The fact that the Minnesota was able to proceed to port without assistance was accepted as indicating that the mine struck the ship near the bow and that she was not badly damaged.

The Minnesota is of the predreadnought type, built at Newport News, Va., in 1905. She is of 16,000 tons displacement, 450 feet long, and in normal times carried a complement of 985 officers and men. Her armament consists of four thirteen-inch, eight eight-inch, and a number of smaller rifles.

"MOST AMAZING WEEK" OF WAR, LONDON SAYS

Total Captures Probably 100,000 Men, Half of These in Palestine.

LONDON, Sept. 29, (British Wireless Service.)—The last week has been the most amazing of the war. The Allies are advancing victoriously on practically every front. During the week they have taken prisoners far in excess of 100,000, of whom nearly 40,000 were captured in the last three days on the west front and 50,000 in Palestine. They also have taken more than 900 guns.

Sir Douglas Haig reports further successes. The town of Cambrai is now under British guns. Here the main Hindenburg line has been pierced and the allied troops are sheltered in commodious German dugouts. The battle is continuing in favor of the Allies and the Germans are in the midst of confused retirement.

A new offensive was begun Saturday in Flanders, where Belgians, in conjunction with the Second British Army, attacked on the front between Ypres and Dixmude.

Rumilly, reaching the western outskirts of the latter village.

During the past three days over 22,000 prisoners and 300 guns have been captured by us on the St. Quentin-Cambrai battlefront.

The text of the day report follows:

At 5:50 o'clock this morning British and American troops attacked northwest of St. Quentin. The battle is proceeding fiercely on the whole front from St. Quentin to the Scarpe.

Heavy fighting took place yesterday about Gonnelieu and the Welsh Ridge. Our troops made progress on the high ground southwest of Gonnelieu but at Welsh Ridge were pressed back slightly. We renewed the attack on this sector at an early hour this morning and made progress, taking prisoners.

At Marcoing we enlarged our bridgehead position yesterday evening. West of the Canal de l'Escaut (Scheldt Canal) and drove off a hostile coutnerattack, taking a number of prisoners. Further north English naval units established themselves east of the River Escaut opposite Cantaing.

North of the Bapaume-Cambrai Road Canadian troops gained possession of the defense system known as the Marcoing-Masnières line as far north as Sailly.

English troops completed the capture of Aubencheul au Bac and Palluel and we are fighting in Arleux. We crossed Tringuise River in the neighborhood of Sailly en Ostrevent.

The number of prisoners captured by British troops since the morning of the 27th exceeds 10,000.

On their left the 2d Division crossed the canal about Noyelles and has advanced over one and a half miles up the rising ground to the east of the canal line.

The 63d Naval Division, having forced a passage east of Cantaing, has reached the southern outskirts of Cambrai.

On the left of the attack Canadian troops have passed through the defensive system covering Cambrai on the northwest and have fought their way forward into the outskirts of the town.

Further north they captured Sancourt, where heavy German counterattacks have been beaten off. English troops have cleared the slopes south of the Sensée Canal.

GENERAL READ WELL KNOWN.

American Commander Abroad Managed Recruiting Campaign Here.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 29.—Major Gen. George W. Read, mentioned by Field Marshal Haig today as commanding the American troops that took Bellicourt, northwest of St. Quentin, is one of the best-known officers of the regular army and had been in command of the 4th Corps of General Pershing's First Army.

Less than a year ago he was a Colonel stationed in the office of General McCain, then Adjutant General at the War Department, and had charge of the campaign that was waged for recruits for the regular army, which brought in approximately 400,000 men inside of twelve months. On Dec. 17, 1917, he was promoted by President Wilson to be a Major General in the National Army. He was ordered to El Paso last Spring to take command of the special cavalry division which was then being formed. Last April he was ordered to Greenville, S. C., to take command of the Thirtieth or Wild Cat Division, composed of National Guard units from North Carolina, South Carolina, and Tennessee. This division only a few weeks ago was in service with the British at Mount Kemmel on the Flanders front.

General March announced on July 27 that General Read, who has proved to be one of the best divisional general officers that the United States had in France, had been assigned to command the 4th Army Corps. This corps consists of the 88d Division, composed of Iowa and part of the Pennsylvania draft troops commanded by Major Gen. E. F. Glenn; the 89th National Army Division, composed of draft troops from Kansas, Missouri, South Dakota, Nebraska, Colorado, New Mexico, and Arizona, commanded by Brig. Gen. Winn; the 37th National Guard Division, composed of Ohio and West Virginia troops, commanded by General Farnsworth; the 29th Division, of National Guardsmen from New Jersey, Maryland, Virginia, Delaware and the District of Columbia, commanded by Major Gen. Morton; the 90th National Army Division of draft troops, from Texas and Oklahoma, commanded by Major Gen. Henry P. Allen, and the 92d Division, which is a negro draft army division, commanded by Major Gen. Bellieu.

General Read was born in Indianola, Iowa, in 1860 and was graduated at West Point in 1883. Three years later he married Miss Burton Young, daughter of Lieut. Gen. S. B. M. Young, former chief of staff of the United States Army. He has been distinctly a cavalry officer.

FRENCH DOWN NINE PLANES.

PARIS, Sept. 28.—Concerning aerial activities of Sept. 27 the official statement from the War Office tonight says:

"Our bombing airplanes made expeditions during the day and night, incessantly harassing enemy transports and troops and attacking convoys. Twenty-five tons of bombs were dropped behind the battlefront, especially on the railroad from Sommepy to Challerange and on the important centres of the Medeah Farm and Ardeuil and on the crossings of the River Aiin. At night the railroad stations at Longuyon and Audun-le-Roman and the aviation field at Stenay were bombarded heavily.

southern outskirts of Pinon Forest. Vaudesson, Chavignon and Fort Malmaison also were captured.

Farther south we progressed considerably on the plateau north of Vailly.

In Champagne the day was marked by violent German counterattacks on our right. Desperate fighting is proceeding in the Boucouville region on the heights south of Gratreuil.

Champagne Battle Desperate.

WITH THE FRENCH ARMY ON THE CHAMPAGNE FRONT, Sept. 29. (Associated Press.)—The battle of Champagne has greatly increased in violence with the arrival of fresh German divisions. The enemy is making a strong fight to halt the advance of General Gouraud's troops toward Vouziers.

Northwest of Bouconvill, Bellevue and Bussy Farm were captured this morning, giving the French a position which commands the important railway junction of Challerange and the defile of the Argonne at Grand-Pré, which Dumouriez in his campaign in 1792 called the Thermopylae of France. The French have also taken Mont Cuvelet, another commanding position west of Bouconville.

With the French dominating the western exit from the Argonne, and the Americans advancing along the eastern edge, one of the strategic objects of the battle, which may be to provoke the fall of the entire Argonne position, is well advanced.

Further west fresh ground has been gained in the region of Auberive, which increases the menace to the strong German positions on the "monts" north of the old Roman road, lying east from Rheims, the Teton, Mont Cornillet, Mont Sans Nom, and Mont Haut.

The possession of the Grand-Pré is one of the big stakes of this battle. When it falls the Germans must make haste to get out of the Argonne region, which explains the desperate defense of its approaches by the best forces the Germans have.

With Challerange under the fire of the French guns, the enemy's movements of troops will encounter vastly increased difficulties. As he is short of motor transports, he has relied mainly on railroads and has supplemented the old French lines with several branches since occupying the region. These railroads are now useless for all concentrations of troops south of Grand-Pré.

Vouziers, another important centre of concentration, is also directly menaced, Gouraud's forces being only about ten miles away. A little further advance will enable them to render this junction also useless, and the whole German system of communications toward the Stenay Gap will crumble.

FRENCH HEADQUARTERS IN CHAMPAGNE, Sept. 28, (Reuters.)—A desperate struggle was made by the Germans to retain possession of Somme-Py. They counterattacked repeatedly in the teeth of French machine guns on the hill south of the town.

French tank crews which assisted in the attack displayed extraordinary gallantry in the capture of a tunnel the Germans were employing to feed reserves to the front and which had been organized into a regular fortress. The tanks had to traverse a labyrinth of trenches under the attack of heavy artillery, but succeeded in their difficult and dangerous mission, enabling the infantry to surround the tunnel and turn the whole Somme-Py position from the east.

Further east the Height of Gratreuil was captured by a surprise attack delivered with such speed that the garrison was surrounded before it realized that it was being attacked. The village had to be cleared by street fighting, however, for the Germans apparently did not realize that they were surrounded.

The enemy's resistance has been intensified along the whole front, as the infantry and machine gunners fall back upon their reserves in new lines, which, although neither so strong naturally nor so well intrenched as the abandoned positions, are far more strongly held, and the problem of piercing them is one of the utmost difficulty.

Probably no troops ever made such an advance as General Gouraud's infantry in the last awo days through such a maze of fortifications. Five distinct trench systems were counted in the space of 1,000 yards, after the first few hours German reserves began to appear, among them at least one division of Prussian Guards, and they counter-attacked furiously.

Direct hits by the heavy guns of the French and Americans upon the broad gauge railroad at two points east of Chevieres, which lies immediately north of the Argonne Forest, were reported today by aerial observers. The Germans have been using the railroad to bring up tops from the west. One shell is reported to have cut the railway and the other to have badly damaged the roadbed.

The enemy greatly increased his resistance all along the American line today, adding his stiffened opposition to the unfavorable weather, which impeded the advance by making liaison difficult and transportation precarious. The opposition was heaviest on the right and left, yet the American extreme left made good progress despite the stiffest kind of fighting against machine guns.

The units to the right likewise had to contend with heavy machine gun and artillery fire from east of the Meuse. Reports indicate that the enemy is bringing up reserves, which will be in a position to operate in the Meuse-Moselle sector, and is concentrating heavy artillery in the woods west of Romagne. Prisoners say that heavy machine guns are being placed along the Kriemhilde defense line and in other sectors in this neighborhood.

The Germans are believed to be now using their reserves for reinforcements, but, notwithstanding this, the American attack continued all day.

At the outset of the attack the line ran from the southern edge of Brieulles to Clerges, from which the enemy had not been entirely expelled; thence to one kilometre south of Exermont, down to Apremont; thence in a southwesterly direction to a point opposite Binarville, and from there westward to Binarville. It remained approximately the same at the close of the day.

FRENCH NEAR ST. QUENTIN.

Take Urvillers, Only 1¾ Miles from the Town.

WITH THE FRENCH ARMY IN FRANCE, Sept. 29, (Associated Press.)—General Debeney's troops attacked shortly before noon today south of St. Quentin and captured Urvillers and Hill 120, the principal point in the German line of resistance running parallel to the Hindenburg line.

The enemy's troops occupying this position recently had received successive orders from General von La Chevallerie in which it was sought to remove from their minds the idea of retreat.

"The position of St. Quentin must be held, cost what it may," said one of these orders, which added: "The idea of an elastic retirement must disappear from this division."

The German positions, consisting of old French trenches, blockhouses, and deep wire entanglements had been considerably widened and strengthened since the enemy retired from the Montdidier salient. The advanced defenses were, as usual, machine gun nests thickly spread among the ravines and hollows.

Advancing with clockwork union with a heavy, creeping barrage, Debeney's men charged the quick-firers and took the culminating point of the line by storm. Further south Cerizy was taken, and at the same time the lines were advanced in front of Urvillers, across the high road running from La Fère to St. Quentin.

The French are solidly installed there within a mile and three-quarters of St. Quentin.

Prisoners admit that the new French positions constitute the gravest menace to the city. The men in front of Urvillers are in close contact with the Hindenburg line.

One of the heights captured by the French had been named by the Germans "Hertling Hill," and a special order impressed upon the troops that the greatest importance was attached to the position, which must be held.

AIRMEN'S PART IN BATTLE.

Render Great Aid to British—Air Losses About Equal.

LONDON, Sept. 29.—The work of the airmen in the battle zone is described by Field Marshal Haig in his report tonight as follows:

"The air force co-operated in every phase of Saturday's operations. Patrols carried out flights far behind the German lines, reconnoitring roads and railroads by day and night. In spite of the clouds and rain, successful observation for the artillery was accomplished. The location of advancing troops was constantly reported to the headquarters of all formations. Enemy troops were bombed and machine-gunned from extremely low heights and heavy casualties were inflicted.

"Twenty-two hostile machines were destroyed and three were driven down out of control. Twenty-four of our machines are missing. Twenty-two tons of bombs were dropped by day.

"Night bombing continued with greater intensity, in spite of the unfavorable weather. Thirty-four tons of bombs were dropped, and many machines continued attacks until dawn. All the night-fliers returned."

them and everywhere there was barbed wire. The communication trenches ran beneath this wire.

Face Terrifying Obstacles.

Turn your attention to the all-night fighting in the Argonne Forest and realize what our men are going through. It is raining and there is inky darkness. The boche is shelling heavily and pouring gas into all the valleys. Our men must travel on the hills. Those hills are being raked by thousands of German 77s.

The Americans in the advance hit the barbed wire. Rifles are slung across shoulders and pliers are pulled out. Busily our men cut wire after wire. The noise they make brings the nasty rat-a-tat of a Hun machine gun from a tree on the other side of the wire. Then another and another, and twenty machine guns are going.

Their aim is poor, and their fiashes give our rifles a chance. Our doughboys pile through that wire fence and through the underbrush and stack up against another fence ten feet further on. The range has been telephoned back to the boche batteries and shells begin to fall all around.

They cut that barbed wire and then stumble on to concealed wire entanglements covered with brush. They climb these. All the time from the dark German snipers and machine-gun men, always with time enough to fall back, are taking their toll. Now our line comes upon a broad trench with more wire. In the dark our boys leap across it; some fall into it. Others get over at the first attempt and pull out their pliers to cut more wires.

All this time it is raining and cold, very cold. The inky blackness there in the forest is broken by streams of fire from machine guns and the intermittent flash of some German sniper, seeming to taunt the youthful Americans struggling against such devilish odds as men seldom have fought against.

Task for Men With Stout Hearts.

It takes stout hearts, it takes real men to stand this. But it was through two and a half miles of this sort of terrain that one American division tore its way through the Argonne Forest. This was the worst part. Further on the wire was less frequent, and our men in the Argonne, having crashed through the Bois d'Apremont, are now reaching a zone where the roads are good, and the advance is easier.

It was hard to get up supplies and ammunition to our men in the Argonne. It was four years ago that these roads were used last. Small trees and bushes filled the strips where the roads had been. Shell holes innumerable and mines set off by the Germans had further ruined them. Automobile trucks had no chance. It was muscle and hard backs that carried up the supplies. Today our engineers are building roads, and things will be brighter, for just beyond where our line runs through the Argonne the roads were used by the boche. In his advance zone he took his supplies up by rails laid in concrete communication trenches, avoiding all use of the roads.

Since the French tried vainly to take it in 1915 the Germans had used the Argonne Forest as a rest area—a sort of recreation ground for their war-worn troops, and had built such defenses as they thought would defy all attempts frontally. For three years the Argonne has been a kind of pleasure resort for boche fighters. It is worth years of any one's life to see what they had built there on the pretty wooded slopes and through tangles of verdant beauty.

Built Underground Palaces.

There were underground palaces with electric illumination and with hotel ranges to cook for the officers. On a slope just a mile back of the front line there is an enormous cave fronting north. Its front was built of brownstone, on which had been chased pillars and other carvings. Above its big portals was the word "Offizierhaus," and above that an enormous iron cross. In this club there were a large dining hall and perhaps ten rooms. The inside was lined with concrete and wooden floors had been laid. At the dining table were mahogany chairs, filched from some nearby French château. Over the General's place hung an electric call bell and electric lights were strung down the middle of the table. It represented the luxury of war. This was just one of hundreds and hundreds of these dug-in and scientifically made dwelling places.

Of course the whole world has heard of the trenches of the Hindenburg line. I had often heard them spoken of as being made of concrete. I would call them masonry. Out in front would be small trenches for the outpost, connecting backward with the first main trench. This was no trench of mud-covered walls and duck boards, yielding into slimy mud under the step. These trenches are lined with cement, with cement floors, along each side of which ran a little drainage ditch.

Each watching soldier had a steel and concrete post with steps leading to it. Nothing could be more complete. Connecting this trench to others in the rear ran communicating trenches of cement, covered with iron roofing and camouflaged and leading back to the officers' underground residences and the men's quarters. Further back were other underground houses for supplies and ammunition, and so on.

Smashed by Our Guns.

Our guns had smashed up some of these places on Thursday morning, but generally they were in good condition. What impressed me most, after seeing the struggles of our men to get up supplies, was to observe along the side of one wide trench a little railroad on which the boche had hauled his supplies to the front line.

To gain an idea of the enormous extent of this work one must bear in mind that from the front of the Hindenburg line to its rear this series of trenches and dugouts covered slightly more than four kilometers. I tell only of what I saw in the Argonne Forest; the same sort of line ran across the Champagne and to the right to the Meuse, this being perhaps a more elaborate defense than that in the Argonne. These were regarded as absolutely safe, and there the German officers seemed especially disposed to make their men perform prodigious labors for their comfort.

Today the Americans are driving their way through the wood lying west of Exermont in the Argonne Forest. Yesterday there was a fierce struggle for possession of the Boie de Beuge, where the Germans had considerable material stored, and it took desperate work to drive them out of the forest north of Brieulles. In the fighting of yesterday about the forest of Septsarges we used many tanks with good results. These tanks are French made, but are manned by Americans.

Men Proud of Their Victory.

Fighting through great obstacles and in the most dismal weather, the spirit of the youthful Americans has stood up splendidly. They take keen pride in the fact that they are driving the boche from positions that he has held for four years. The behavior of new American Army units has excited the greatest enthusiasm.

An American General, a man who has seen many battles, was telling me after a visit to a hospital that he asked a wounded doughboy who had never seen a battle before if we could lick the boche.

"Why, sure," was the reply. The General thought that the finest thing he had heard in many a day.

The infantrymen returning from the front line after being relieved are loud in their praise of the service of supplies and ammunition over the greatest difficulties. This has been made possible by the fine work of the engineers in remaking roads, building bridges, &c. Many of these engineer troops are negroes.

A detachment of them was building a bridge in the Aire Valley, with their rifles stacked nearby, when some German machine gunners in an overlooked nest in a nearby woods, chose these unarmed men as their target and nicked several of them. Seven negroes got excused by the Major and went gunning for the boches. Twenty minutes later they came back with four prisoners and the helmets of the other three, whom they had killed.

"Man," said one big negro in telling about it, "I had to use mah speedy rifle on one bush German dat was up a tree. I sho' do wish I had had some bird shot. I don't like these heah bush Germans; dey done coaxed me too far 'way from mah home in Vicksburg."

These negro engineers are doing excellent work.

Sustained by Fatalism.

They never quaver at laboring under heavy shellfire, and seemingly are imbued with a remarkable fatalism.

"Dey tells me," said one of them, "dat one soldier in five gits killed. Well, I nachully don't believe I am dat fifth nigger, 'cause I always was a lucky nigger."

Against this spirit the boche 77s don't get very far.

One big engineer got tired of breaking rock, and taking his rifle slipped off. He told his pal that he was going into the woods to get some souvenirs. An hour later he came back, shoving along with his bayonet a German Major with his orderly. The orderly had on his back a large bag. The negro turned over his prisoners to his commander, who started off with the two boches, when the negro engineer stealthily relieved the orderly of the bag. It was filled with souvenirs which the negro had gathered up in the cave where he found the Germans, and he had forced his prisoner to bring it along.

The German officer had stayed in the cave and been surrounded by the Americans on the day before. The negro swore that the German officer shot at him five times, but the officer said he merely was waiting for a chance to surrender, knowing he could not get back to his troops.

Counterattacks Fail.

Sept. 28.—Heavy fighting has continued today. The First American Army, despite most stubborn resistance by crack German troops, has made gains.

German counterattacks have not developed on the scale expected from the boche concentration of fresh troops before our divisions. The main opposition continues to be in the nature of a passive stubborn holding against our advancing troops. Today our troops had the support of a full complement of artillery, which was lacking somewhat yesterday because of the great difficulty in getting it up.

For four kilometers, and sometimes more, back of the Hindenburg line, the boche had built a series of trenches and wireworks and masonry, portions of which practically obliterated the roads in this sector. After about five kilometers beyond the Hindenburg line the highways become better, but our engineers are performing a colossal task in mending the roads over terrific obstacles.

Perhaps the most dramatic fighting in which American troops have engaged was the battle lasting through the night in the Argonne Forest. Our advance ran into an elaborate system of machine-gun posts, to help hold which new divisions of good quality had been hurriedly put in. These machine guns were in trees and dugouts, but for a part were cleverly concealed in underbrush. These had to be overcome by stalking and surrounding movements. It so happened that the troops called on for this job were all city boys, unused to woodland hunting; but the good job they made gunning for the boche machine gunners was shown by the fact that slightly after dawn this morning they reported they had carried the line. Their prisoners later arriving at Division Headquarters proved their report. In this struggle there were many hand-to-hand fights, grenading and bayonetting. Practically no artillery could be used here by either side.

Meet Some Old Foes.

One of our divisions took prisoners from a German division which had opposed them at Fismes, on the Vesle River.

North of the Epionville-Montfaucon road we also had heavy fighting today, the boche being found in shallow, newly made trenches with many machine guns.

Our observers report the Germans feverishly at work on the Kriemhilde Stellung, the line running through Savigny, Grandpré, St. Juvin, Romagne, Brieulles, and Haranmont. Our heavy guns are greatly interfering with this work, as well as bombarding the boche traffic centres, Duns-sur-Meuse and Buzancy.

Despite the cold, cloudy weather, with frequent rains, our aerial service is hard at work. Observation work is difficult, the mist making it necessary to fly very low. Boche chasse machines were scarcer today than for the preceding thirty-six hours. Lieutenant Hoover brought down an Albatross near Sery. Lieutenant White got two Fokkers to his credit near Montfaucon. Lieutenant Buckley and Lieutenant Curtis accounted for a biplane boche observation plane. Lieutenants Buckley, Butz and Woodward scored a big Rumpler near Brieulles.

Last night our army bombers dropped seven tons of high explosives on Longuyon, Audun, Frieux, Gourincourt, and Steanay. British bombers visited Metz-Sablons, Mézières, Ars, Thionville, and Fresoaty, reporting good results. The boche chasse machines seem unwilling to give fight, except when in large numbers, and generally stay well over their side of the line.

The Germans are circulating stories that America has sent only seven planes to the front, and that six of these were brought down by the Germans and the seventh has not been heard from. Surely the boche aviators know better than this.

All in all, the battle goes well today. The total of captured material and prisoners has continued to grow.

Foe Hoped to Hold Line.

The capture by the Americans of the whole of the German line running along the highway from Charpentry northeast to Epionville, Montfaucon, and Dannevoux has put our troops on a strong line running about six kilometers south of and parallel to the German Kriemhelde or Brunehilde-Stellung line.

This line, on which the boche expected to try to halt all further American advance, crosses the Meuse at Brieulles, and runs west through Romagnes-sur-Montfaucon and Grand Pré, following generally the rather deep valley, with hills rising to the north along almost all of it. In the region of Nantillois our troops reached within four kilometers of the Kriemhilde line.

In the Bois de la Côte Lemont, Bois de Cierges, and the north end of the Argonne Forest the Germans have heavy concentrations of troops from which they have drawn some forces which began counterattacks against us late yesterday. Our troops in the Bois de Septsarges, of which the Bois de la Côte Lemont is a continuation, and at Ivoiry are only two kilometers from Cierges.

Heavy fighting continues, the Germans fighting strenuous rearguard machine-gun actions, in addition to counterattacking. Their artillery, placed behind the Kriemhilde-Stellung line, has been very active for twenty-four hours. Our artillery was far from silent last night, and we gassed heavily the vicinities where the boche concentrations were believed to be. This morning we are pushing our attack vigorously. Bad weather has hampered communications, and no detailed reports have come back yet.

The heaviest fighting yesterday took place for possession of Hill 315, dominating Montfaucon, and for Charpentry and the edge of the Forest of Argonne. We had got troops around to the west and north of Montfaucon and into the town before the boche had been cleared out of the wooded hill just to the east of the town.

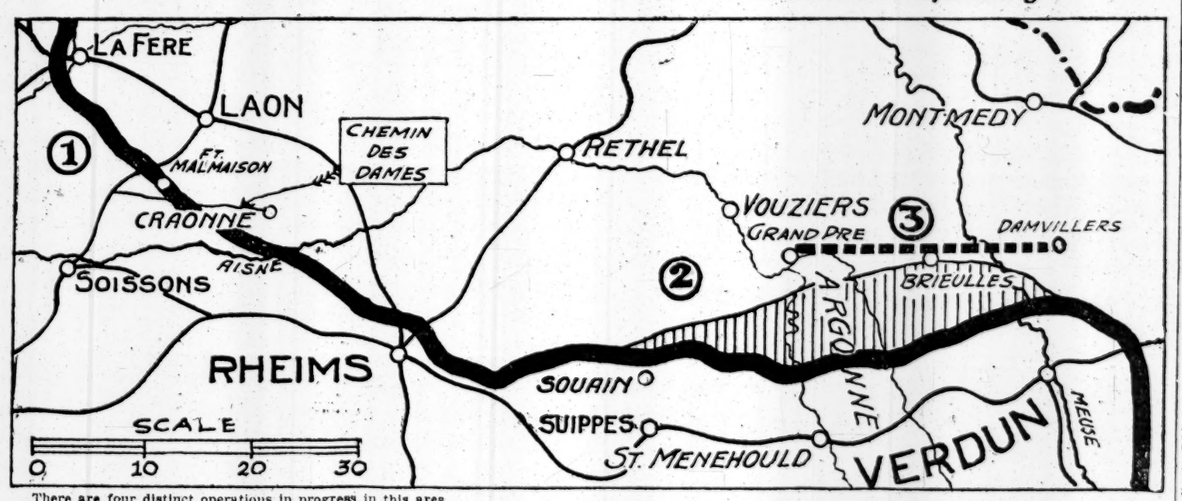
Along the Montfaucon-Cuissy road the Germans had heavily held the line with machine-gun nests at Payel Farm, nestling in the southern foothill, and machine-gun nests all along the south slope. An attack by our troops to take this hill in the morning failed.

Then we withdrew to the north edge of the Bois de Montfaucon, and put down an extra heavy shellfire on the hill, after which it was taken by storm.

In the capture of Charpentry, late in the day, our tanks played an important rôle, smashing machine-gun positions. Our tanks have been lucky against the German anti-tank guns, which have scored few hits. More have been hit by ordinary 77 shells than by these special weapons with which the boche had thought to meet the peril of allied tanks.

The weather continues bad, rainy, and cold.

The La Fere-Laon Front Where French and Americans Are Operating



There are four distinct operations in progress in this area.

The westernmost is a new drive by French troops north of La Pere [which is directly south of St. Quentin] in connection with the great British stroke from St. Quentin north. [Shown on another map.]

The second operation, which is being conducted by the French under Mangin, is the vitally important thrust to flank the Chemin des Dames. The capture of Port Malmaison Saturday clinched the French success, and the Germans are reported now to be retiring from that whole front.

The third operation is the drive into Champagne, Gouraud commanding the French troops. Here the chief objectives are Grand Pré (at the western end of the Kriemhilde line—here marked by the black blocks), and Vouziere. The Germans are likely to be flanked out of the Argonne here.

The fourth operation is that of the Americans, driving on a front from the Argonne to north of Verdun. Brieulles, close to the Kriemhilde line, has been captured by our troops. The shaded portion here represents the gain that has been made by the Americans and French on this joint front.

PERSHING'S AIRMEN ALL AMERICAN NOW

Still Using Some Allied Machines, But Our Own Are Arriving Fast.

No German Flier Crossed Our Line in First Six Hours—Original Tactics Used.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, Sept. 28.—Folks back home must tip their hats to the American aviator. He has caught up. Hindered by the early lack of machines and then further handicapped, he had seen American infantry and American artillery fight battles "on their own" while he was unable to do his full part. The American forces always had to have French or British airmen in addition to those of our own service in the battle.

Two weeks ago, when the First American Army struck the blow at the St. Mihiel salient, five-sevenths of the airmen who were working with the army were other than American. But in the present effort of the First American Army between the Meuse and the Aisne we are using only American airmen. Fighters, observers, pilots, bombers—all are American. It is the first operation of American troops in which this has been true.

And, so I say, the American aviator has caught up.

Of course the greater part of the airplanes which those aviators are using are not American made, but more of our planes are arriving every week from the United States.

Our Flyers Efficient.

Not only are the airmen of the First American Army taking care of our front between the Meuse and the Aisne, but they are also caring for the front from the Meuse to the Moselle at the same time. They are doing the job excellently. We have air supremacy in all parts of the battlefront, and for the first six hours of the fight not one enemy plane got over the American line.

In three days, despite the prevailing bad weather, the American aviators downed sixty German airplanes and twelve observation balloons.

Our observers have made scores of flights and taken hundreds of photographs. Our day bombers have done immense damage at strategic points far back of the German lines, braving large swarms of enemy pursuit planes and carrying out their dangerous missions.

Among the air victors in this battle is Lieutenant Eddie Rickenbacher, who long ago became an ace by downing five Huns. Now he has eleven to his credit.

The first morning of the battle our airmen, knowing the German air centres in the Briey-Longwy-Metz district, put a cordon along the Meuse River, a hundred planes to meet the enemy on his way to the battle scene.

Ten combats took place in which a number of Germans were brought down and none reached our battleline before noon.

Versatile Machines.

In the meanwhile the versatile De Haviland fours, finding the mist too thick for observation, attacked the German lines with machine guns. The official orders praise the effectiveness of this work. Two squadrons of pursuit machines, finding nothing else to do, went out bombing, which was rather a new rôle for pursuit machines. This was done by hooking on to each airplane 440 pounds of bombs containing high explosives, which were dropped on groups of German soldiers. One of these machines bombed a battery while in action and silenced it.

Our regular bombers dropped two tons of bombs on Etain, scoring seven direct hits on the railroad track, which could be seen to be torn up in several places.

Day bombing is very dangerous work, because it takes the airplanes far back of the lines in full visibility, and these planes are less quick than the enemy's present machines.

This fact led yesterday to what perhaps was one of the biggest single air combats of the war. To a series of points north of Verdun were sent thirty-four bombing fours. They were attacked by thirty-six Fokkers in battle formation. Under skillful leadership our planes kept a solid formation, and in returning accounted for seven Fokkers. Five of our aircraft did not get back.

Individual Exploits.

This way of bombing lends to many thrilling exploits. Lieutenant Taylor brought his machine back through a barrage that caught him and landed unhurt with three holes through the wings.

Lieutenants Merrick, Ford, Rummell and Fuller were caught in an enemy aerial barrage, but escaped, Fuller getting twelve holes through his airplane.

On one aerial patrol an officer became separated from the rest of the squadron in a mist.

An hour later he fell just inside our lines, and he reported that he had brought down three planes, one his own and the other two Germans. He was unhurt. He leaves for America in a few days.

American commanders with whom I talked today asked that full tribute be paid to our aviators, who measured up to the highest standard and met every demand made upon them.

Nothing that I have said should be taken to mean that there is reason for any letup in the most energetic effort to get airplanes from America to France. The army needs all it can get. If the First American Army is well off with a full complement of airplanes by a certain standard, it would be twice as well off with twice as many machines. After it received twice as many machines as it had, it would be doubly fortunate to have double that number. There is no limit to the number of airplanes which can be advantageously used by the American forces.

OUR INFANTRYMEN SHOOT DOWN AVIATOR

German Flier After Raiding Town in Vosges Encounters Rifle Fire of Whole Company.

By EDWIN L. JAMES.

Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, Sept. 28.—A German airman, with a morning grouch, flying over a town back of the American line, swooped down, sending fitful machine-gun bursts along the streets. Flying 150 feet high, he had to rise sharply to avoid the steeple of the Hôtel de Ville.

As he came downward beyond the steeple two American military policemen opened on him with their automatic pistols. Retaliating, he cut loose with his machine gun, wounding a civilian. Then, with the military policemen still shooting, the German turned and started back toward home. At a height of 500 feet he passed a company of American infantry.

The Captain, having heard the shots in the village, was watching, and as the airplane got just overhead he gave the order to fire. The enemy's plane must have been hit a hundred times. It burst into flames and tumbled to earth, riddled with rifle bullets from the doughboys' rifles. The aviator was killed instantly.

OVER 20 TOWNS TAKEN, PERSHING REPORTS

Sixty Planes and 12 Balloons Downed by Our Airmen—Vast Material Captured.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 29.—In reporting further advances of the Americans northwest of Verdun, General Pershing's communiqué for yesterday, received here tonight, says American aviators "have kept command of the air. They have brought down twelve balloons and more than sixty enemy planes, while less than a third of that number of American planes are missing. The statement follows:

American Official Communiqué 137.
Headquarters American Expeditionary Forces,
Sept. 28, 1918.

Section A—The attack begun on Sept. 26 continues to develop successfully. Today our troops, advancing in the face of heavy infantry, artillery, and machine gun fire, have reached the outskirts of Brieulles and Exermont. More than twenty towns and enormous quantities of material have fallen into our hands. The number of prisoners continues to increase. American aviators have kept command of the air. They have brought down twelve balloons and more than sixty enemy planes, while less than a third of that number of our planes are missing. In conjunction with French and British aviators they have, notwithstanding unfavorable weather, rendered valuable service and successfully executed many missions.

Section B—The following extract is from a German soldier's letter found in the Woevre Sept. 22:

"Americans are in front of us. To the right of us Indians of the Sioux tribe were identified in one of the last attacks. After the war Karl May can write another book about his war experiences with his dear Indians.'"

GERMANS ABANDON MALMAISON FRONT

Their Retreat from Chemin des Dames Positions Exposes Laon to an Attack.

TRY TO HOLD TO THE EAST

Ten New Battalions Thrown Into Champagne Battle Fail to Stop Gouraud's Advance.

By G. H. PERRIS.

Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES, Sept. 29.—General von Carlowitz has suddenly abandoned the Malmaison front, (the western end of the Chemin des Dames,) and has retreated behind the Ailette as far east as the Oise-Aisne Canal Reservoir. This retreat from one of the strongest German positions in the west began Friday night.

General Mangin's army had been steadily pursuing its patient investment of the Malmaison Plateau by a concentric movement from the northwest, west, and south, and fought on Friday a fierce engagement at Colombe Farm, where it took 200 prisoners, and north of Allemant, where it repulsed a counterattack.

The whole region was bombarded during the night, and when at 6 o'clock yesterday morning patrols were sent out they encountered resistance around the villages of Py and Aisy. The way seemed cleared on the spurs down to the Aisne. At Vailly exploding bombs and burning stores made it clear what was afoot, and at 9 A. M. a general advance began between Vauxaillon and Vailly toward the northeast.

The famous old landmarks of the west end of the Cremin des Dames were quickly reached and passed. In the moat of Fort Malmaison violent explosions took place, but precautions had been taken, and no one was hurt.

By evening the French were in Pinon and Vaudesson, where the front ran across the Malmaison Plateau to a point east of Vailly.

During the night and this morning the pursuit continued, and they are now on the old front on the Ailette from Pinon Wood through Chavignon to the canal reservoir near Pargny Filain, whence the front runs south by Ostel to the Aisne at Chavonne.

On his left Mangin has a more advanced front than the old one, for the line north of the Ailette has been brought up to Grandcourt Village, so that Anizy-le-Château and the valley up to Laon are threatened from the west as well as the south. Here strong resistance is to be expected.

So far there is no news of a retirement from the Vesle.

Needless to say, this radical change in the situation has had a most invigorating effect on the troops who have been supporting their heavy task for a month past.

Foe Reinforced in Champagne.

Heavy German counterattacks were delivered over most of the Champagne front yesterday afternoon. At least ten new battalions, including one of the Guards, have now been brought into the conflict. As a rule they fought well, and many of the prisoners are sturdy fellows. On the other hand, the haste of the enemy's retreat and reinforcement has produced a certain dislocation. For instance, men belonging to four different regiments were found in a single trench.

Notwithstanding a night of fine rain which covered the battlefield with white slime, the French progress was resumed at 10 o'clock this morning. On the left Auberive has been passed. The ridge of Notre Dame des Champs, north of Ste. Marie Py, is stubbornly defended.

At the centre the villages of Marne and Auer, the latter being six miles from the original line, were carried. Auer is the most northerly point reached. Four strongholds east of this have been captured today, namely, Hill 187, beyond Gratreuil; Le Belliveau Hill, Buzy Farm, and Mont Cuvelet. West of Bouconville the enemy artillery has been very much in evidence, but there is a general slackening of resistance.

Today, as I write, news comes in of the capture of Bouconville, which is within four miles of Challerange Junction and Grandpré. These important centres of German communications are therefore now under French fire.

50,000 TURKS, 325 GUNS, ALLENBY'S BAG TO DATE

British East of Jordan Join Hands With Arabs of King of the Hedjaz.

LONDON, Sept. 29.—Prisoners to the number of 50,000 and 325 guns had been counted by the British in Palestine Friday night, according to an official communication issued tonight.

Notwithstanding Turkish resistance in the region of Tiberias, the British forced further passages of the Jordan.

To the south the British cavalry drove the enemy northward through Mezeris and joined hands with the forces of the King of the Hedjaz.

The text of the communication reads:

Throughout Friday the enemy offered resistance in the Tiberias area, holding the crossings of the upper Jordan and positions astride the road to Mezerib and Derat. In the evening the Australians forced a passage of the Jordan, and Saturday morning drove the enemy from their positions and crossed to the left bank.

Southeast of Lake Tiberias our cavalry overcame Turkish resistance at Irbid and Erreinte and drove the enemy northward to Mezerib, joining hands with King Hussein's Arab army about Derat.

King Hussein, who had captured the railroad stations of Ezra and Ghazle, north of Derat on the Hedjaz line, Thursday entered Derat, and Sheikh-Saad Friday, taking 1,500 prisoners. Northward the movement of our cavalry, covered on their right by the Arabs, is being continued from the Derat area and is approaching Mezerib.

and it was the British way, forward from the British guns.

Hundreds of Guns in Action.

There are hundreds of guns firing off this southern front. They had been firing this morning when the attack began for forty-eight hours without cessation, and then for hours the British gunners fired gas shells over the German lines, so that we must have spread a zone of death over a wide territory. Thousands of rounds of gas shells were flung over the German batteries and assembly places. Then the assault began with a few minutes' hurricane bombardment before the infantry moved forward behind the creeping barrage.

A hundred tanks or so had gone far forward in the night, hiding themselves until they crawled out at the first glimpse of light today, and when the infantry made for that Canal de Lescaut, or the Scheldt, as we call it, which is but a few yards wide where it goes above ground.

To cross it would be a military feat as great as anything in the history of the war, more difficult even than crossing the Canal du Nord, which the British did on Friday morning. For five kilometers north of Bellicourt the canal goes underground, but this is defended by the Hindenburg line, immense belts of wire and deep, wide trenches and a network of earthworks.

On the extreme right of the line English divisions—South Midland with the First and Sixth Divisions from left to right—set out again to gain the crossings by Bellenglise and build bridges to carry tanks and guns. The enemy knew our attack was imminent. The British had warned him by all their fire. To check it he fired heavily back last night and this morning, especially in Ascension Valley, but this shelling was powerless to break the British plans and the German gun powder was feeble compared with the terrible British bombardment which opened on him this morning with a hurricane fire after those two days of steady slogging.

Through the white fog went the British men and their tanks, and at 7:25, not much more than an hour after the attack began, it was reported back to their headquarters that they had secured a crossing and were well on their side of the canal, with many prisoners in the hands of the South Midland men. Some of the British say they actually swam the canal under cover of the fog and in ice-cold water.

The main Hindenburg line on this sector was broken through and the British troops are so much past it at many points that it is now only of ironical memory, and the enemy must rely on mythical lines to hide his fears and his defeat.

Tommies Reassure Prisoners.

I saw batches of prisoners coming back from canal banks with wet chalk on their uniforms, but the chalk was no whiter than the faces of these men who had been under two days' bombardment and had been almost maddened by it, or at least stunned and dazed.

The English Tommies grouped around the forward cages, all vague in the mist, and shouted out questions to the prisoners as they came up, and made cheery remarks to them as if to ease them of their fears. It was a queer scene in the midst of the fog, and more fantastic than many things I have seen on days of battle.

North of the Ninth Corps on the right of the attack Australians and Americans stormed the canal, where a thousand yards were above the ground on their front and a thousand yards below, north and south of Bellicourt. Their left boundary was just below Vendeuville, where other English troops formed the flank and tried to bridge the cana

The line in front of the American and Australian front was terrific in its original strength, for besides the wide canal there was a great belt of wire and many trenches. However, this morning the wire had been well cut by the British guns, and tanks were with the British to force a passage beyond and keep down machine-gun fire if they could get across.

They went across by the marvelous valor of the men, who established their bridges in spite of a heavy German barrage. This by good luck fell mostly behind them, and few of the British wounded were hurt in their desperate eagerness to keep close to their own barrage fire, the Americans being less experienced in this than the Australians, who were mostly veterans.

Notwithstanding the annihilating British bombardment, there was a fierce machine-gun fire from the enemy, and the British had hard going at first, but they broke down all resistance and, having passed to the other side of the canal, went ahead with the tanks around Bony and Bellicourt, where they had their worst fighting, and toward the next organized line of German resistance known as the Masinères-Beaurevoir line.

Prisoners taken on this side say up to that time this line had not been manned, but observers report the rapid movement of German trains westward, showing that the enemy is rushing up reinforcements to hold this position, where probably a great battle will be fought. Once through that line the Allies are out in the open country, and anything may happen then.

Fierce Battle for La Vacquerie.

Sunday Night.—English troops were advancing this morning on the Gouzeaucourt-Mesnières road by way of La Vacquerie, where there was such desperate fighting last November. It was strongly held again and stubbornly defended, but our men broke into the sunken road and south of it and pinched it out, and over a thousand prisoners were taken.

On that front New Zealanders passed through Lancashire troops and fanned out in a wide patrol, moving forward and driving the enemy before them. Gouzeaucourt and Villers-Guislain below them were taken by English divisions who had advanced over Welsh Ridge, from which they had been driven back yesterday.

They went through two villages without encountering much opposition, the enemy having fled except for a few panic-stricken men, and they then advanced on the strong position of Gonnelieu, where they had very bitter fighting. Held up by savage machine gun fire, they fell back a little in order to wait for tanks to destroy those machine gun nests, and it is reported that things have gone in our favor in that neighborhood.

Following the battle still northward, our Sixth Corps was heavily engaged today around Masnières and Lateau Wood, where, in the Cambrai salient last November, our Twenty-ninth Division fought to death. Once again the outskirts of Masnières became a German shambles, and in that alleyway of ruined houses called "Les Rues Vertes" English troops fought with determination and broke the enemy.

Meanwhile our 6th Naval Division, who had been fighting so long and so hard since their capture of Quéant and Pronville many days ago, now stormed the German defenses around Lateau Wood, which is now in their hands.

Sixth Corps Takes 4,000 Prisoners.

Our Sixth Corps have counted 4,000 prisoners since Friday morning. A regiment of Yorkshiremen captured Marcoing, and one of their battalions, the Fifth Duke of Wellington's, the forward passage of the Canal de Lescaut in this neighborhood by very glorious courage under heavy fire. Other divisions cleared the west bank of the canal as far north as La Folie Wood and are reported to have captured the village of Noyelles, where they had to sustain fierce counterattacks.

West of Marcoing our brave old Third Division on the right of the Guards went through the Hindenburg support line and worked forward on Friday and Saturday from Flesquières Ridge and took a record number of prisoners for one division in this battle. The Guards themselves fought according to their old traditions and have done great work in smashing through their part of the Hindenburg Line and pressing on to Orival Wood and Primy Chapel and clearing the Bapaume-Cambrai Road.

On the left of the attack the Canadians and leventh English Division are still advancing north of Cambrai and putting the city within their grip by an encircling movement. After their wonderful passage of the Canal du Nord on Friday morning between Les Moeuvres and Inchy they fought and beat many battalions of German divisions who had intended to attack them.

Yesterday morning advance parties of the 270th Division came in touch with the advancing Canadians, and by last night they, too, had lost prisoners from all their battalions, who are now in Canadian hands. Today the Canadians are swinging well north of Cambrai through the village of Blecourt, north of Thilloy, and toward Ramillies, and for any Germans left in Cambrai there is no hope but of quick escape. Some of them have already escaped with as much booty as they can take, judging from what I saw yesterday.

Train Quits Cambrai in a Hurry.

As I looked down into the city from the ground north of Bourlon Wood, out of Cambrai came a German train. It was a train in a hurry, with full steam up, and raced away to the hinterland, where there was more safety for German staff officers.

This is only a bare outline of the great battle, which has already been decided in our favor and given us thousands of prisoners and many guns and the Hindenburg line for many miles. Of all the human element I can say only a few words, though I should like to write many about the courage and splendor of all our men who have the spirit of victory in their hearts and are taking all risks and daring everything with the eager desire to press on and on.

It is mighty labor, for fighting is hard work all the time, and not joyous excitement, as some folks think. It is a surge and struggle forward of hundreds of thousands of men down narrow ways choked with traffic, over fields under fire, through ruined villages into which shells are falling, or where they mal fall at any second.

It is a labor of moving guns over rough ground with mules and horses that have been going for many days, so that some of them drop dead, and there is a trail of dead horses of which some have been killed by shrapnel and some by shells and some by bombs.

It is a labor of armies of men making roads through ground just captured and pushing out railway lines into deeper desolation. It is a labor of engineers and pioneers making the way of the army straight, and, lastly, it is a labor of gunners and infantry hungry for sleep, firing their guns until they are red hot, then moving to fire on new targets, and, if they are infantry, marching, maching, marching in support of those ahead, passing through them to new attacks, resisting counterattacks when they have won a battle, having no chance for rest until they in turn are leapfrogged by comrades coming up behind.

Gunner officers are hoarse with shouting orders and haggard from lack of sleep. Infantry officers snatch sleep if they can in any ditch or behind any broken wall, while shells are bursting close and their men are digging a little cover before the next advance.

It is a superhuman effort of physical strength and will power, but throughout our armies as I have seen them during the last three days there is a grim sense of meeting an enemy on the run and smashing him so beyond recovery that ever after this he will have to back and back before us until he is cleared out of Belgium and France.

The news from the north is astounding, and the good Belgians are reported to have Dixmude, that Dixmude which I saw in flames four years ago and entered on the day of the tragedy. We have the Flanders ridges again and thousands of prisoners who held them, and, after all, that bloody fighting of last year from Ypres to Paschendaele has not been made vain by the loss of all the ground, but is ours after a brief tenure by the enemy.

In these last three days, the most successful in all these years of war, we have struck the enemy a smashing and decisive blow from the sea to Verdun, and the Hindenburg line is now a farce—a farce and a tragedy which will shock the people of Germany to their hearts, because it breaks their last hopes of safety.

They know they are beaten. In every cage there are many officers, some of them of high rank, like one I saw yesterday who was commander of a German cavalry regiment taken by the Canadians. He praised our leadership and our men's fighting quality, and was very polite and humble, new qualities of German officers who come into our hands. Those I saw today, fresh from the Hindenburg line across the canal by St. Quentin, saluted as men who raise their hands to victors.

Airmen Hampered by Fog.

Today's battle, fought in the fog, made news difficult to get by our army commanders. Our airmen were out before dawn, or just after dawn, as I saw them ready to go, but they could see nothing for several hours through that dense ground haze, though the sky was blue above them; but afterward, when the mist lifted like a curtain revealing all the drama of the battle, they flew low and swooped over our infantry to read their signals and then came back with good tidings. One of them came to corps headquarters and dropped his message just outside the hut of the General Staff officers, who were hungry for his news.

The sky this morning was crowded with these scouts of ours like midges on a Summer day, and before the fog cleared it was strange to hear their engines singing up there above the darkness on earth. When the sun came and lifted that curtain of mist, flooding all the fields with golden light, a French officer with me raised his hand, smiled, and said in a voice of emotion:

"The sun of Austerlitz. The herald of great victory."

It has indeed been a day of victory and we should be thankful to the men of those English, Canadian, Australian, New Zealand, and American troops who by enormous courage and enduring fatigue gained this new success for the world, bringing nearer the vision of all good things when there shall be an end of this.

AMERICAN SOLDIERS GOT WEST POINT IDEA

Pershing's Men Have Mastered Regular Army Officers' Tradition of Obedience.

ACCEPT HARDSHIPS QUIETLY

How Can You Beat Combination of Horse Sense and Imagination? Major General Asks.

By CHARLES H. GRASTY.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Sept. 29.—I have had a new access of astonishment during a recent visit to the front at what I saw there. A correspondent located in Paris and London must naturally have been enthusiastic over the American soldiers' performances during the last four months, and occasionally there would come the sense of overdoing their praise somewhat. My last visit has made me feel as if that would be pretty difficult. Each new lot seems better than the last.

Where did such men come from? I didn't see them in America, and an old country schoolteacher has some right to feel that he knows American material. Intrinsically good, yes, excellent! But a little rebellious and perhaps lacking in reverence, and much in need of training on the average. We knew these fellows had good physiques, moral character, and intellect, developed in free, but lawful, wholesome surroundings, and in that splendid common school which has been the cradle of our American manhood.

Amenable to Discipline.

Where have they got their discipline, for they will go and do where and what their officers tell them as obediently as the vaunted Prussian? Where did they learn their upstanding, smart carriage which seems universal among the American troops? Whence came their quiet acceptance of the hardest conditions? From what teaching was derived their cheerful perseverance in the dullest task, with never a trace of the peculiar, spasmodic quality usually associated with the popular understanding of American energy? Old West Point men in the Woevre told me: "They grabbed our West Point tradition of absolute obedience and ran away with it as they have with every other martial virtue." A Major General of one of the crack divisions said:

"Of course, you never saw this particular kind of men at home. They weren't there, either. They're high-strung, high-spirited, tractable, but solid young fellows who've been touched by the fire of war, and it's made them over. When you've got a combination of imagination and horse sense, how can you beat it?"

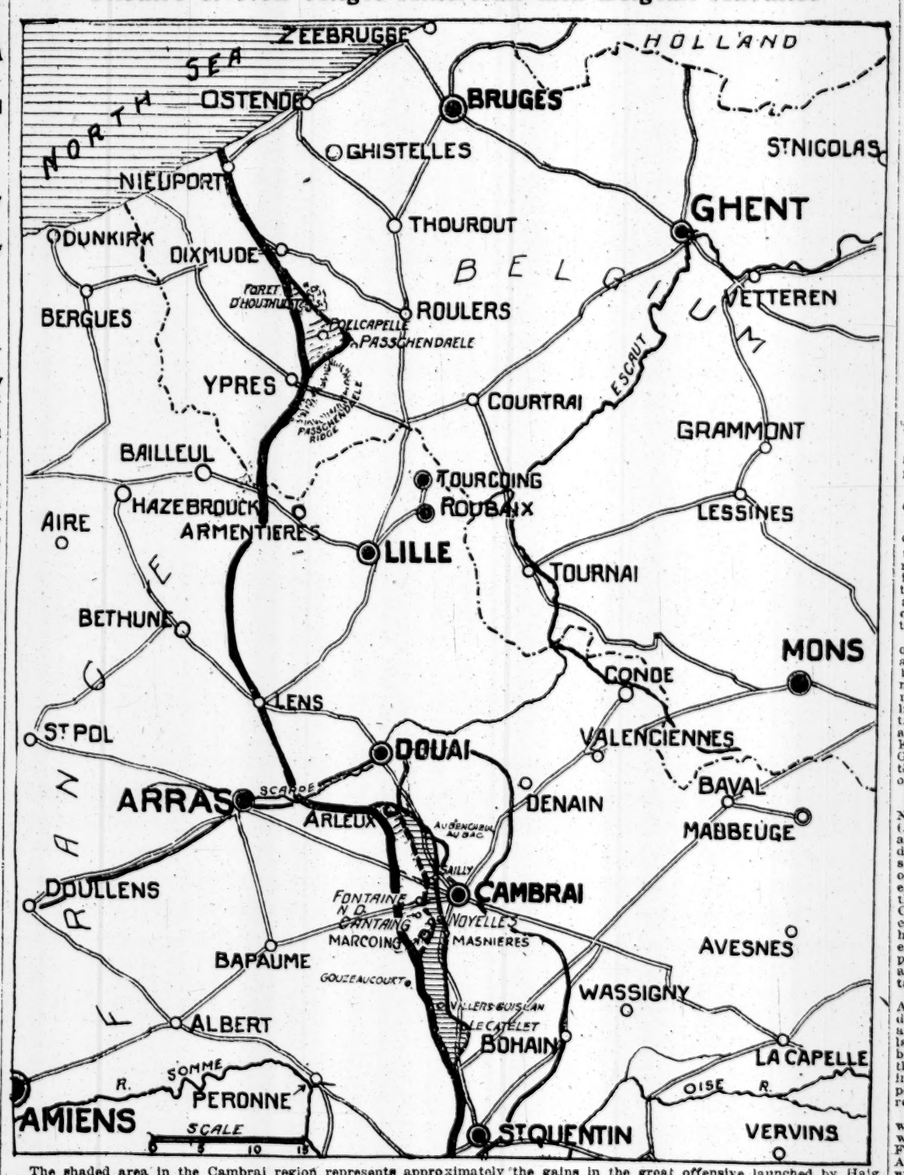
It would be difficult to send a better missionary to Europe than Samuel Gompers. He makes a fine impression everywhere and never strikes a jarring note. He is a natural interpreter between the two big, human self-interests into which society is divided and in which there is fundamentally, perhaps, more that is in common than the competitive. Gompers treats what has always been a delicate matter as one in which misunderstanding is the root of the trouble.

Meanwhile, he does not give anybody a chance to say he has gone over to the capitalistic side, and is always ready, after getting their minds well open, to hammer home the claims of labor before, during, and after the war. He is loyally and properly keeping in mind the advantage of the present molten conditions to stamp the cause of labor on the world. In Gompers's meetings here I have seen old, case-hardened employers who have always thought labor unions were inventions of the devil light up as if they had caught a brand new idea from Gompers's conciliatory broad talk, backed by the splendid record he has made.

It was amusing to see Gompers pushing ideas into long-ossified brains, painlessly, like a dentist operating with laughing gas. In using conciliatory language he draws a line on the Hun, and few speakers have been so convincing as to America's clear and unalterable purposes. He brought his American Club audience upstanding when he said:

"I've been reading where some German called us bellicose." Then, after a pause, he resumed: "Well, it's true. What in hell did we go into this war for?"

Theatre of New Anglo-American and Belgian Advance



The shaded area in the Cambrai region represents approximately the gains in the great offensive launched by Haig yesterday. Late official reports show that the British have advanced to the very edge of Cambrai, and that the Americans co-operating with them captured the villages of Bellicourt and Nauroy, south of Le Catelet.

In Flanders the Belgian advance has gone beyond the line indicated by shading. King Albert's troops have advanced to within two miles of Roulers.

ROMAGNE, BRIEULLES TAKEN BY AMERICANS

Germans Throw In New Troops, but Fail to Stop Our Advance.

PARIS, Sept. 29.—The American Army operating on the Champagne front has captured Brieulles-sur-Meuse and Romagne, [which is on the Kriemhilde line,] west of that town on the outskirts of the forest of Romagne, and the attack is progressing favorably.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY NORTHWEST OF VERDUN, Sept. 29, (Associated Press.)—On the American left the Germans have resorted to heavy machine gun and trench mortar fire. The artillery activity has increased along the entire line with the Americans easily outshooting the enemy. East of the Meuse the German artillery fire has been quite heavy.

At Exermont, just east of the Argonne Forest, the enemy offered bitter resistance to the Americans.

Northeast of Nantillois, somewhat east of the centre, the Americans already have advanced beyond their positions of yesterday morning. The Americans there took prisoners from a Bavarian reserve division, which had been resting in Alsace and moved into the line yesterday. They also took prisoners from another reserve division which had sent one battalion from each regiment into the line.

Enemy resistance increased steadily on the left of the American sector, and a number of new German units have been identified. The enemy troops in many instances yesterday held on to machine-gun nests until they were literally wiped out. The American extreme left continues to advance steadily along the edge of the Argonne Forest. From batteries east of the Meuse the Germans last night bombarded heavily the region of Brieulles and other points on the right of the American line.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY NORTHWEST OF VERDUN, Sept. 28, (Associated Press.)—Fighting their way almost every yard, American troops today wrested from the Germans another strip of territory. Although they are opposing the advancing Americans with every arm of the service except cavalry, there is increasing evidence that the Germans are only fighting for time to establish themselves along the Kriemhilde or Brunhilde line. The present operation is a rear guard action on the part of the enemy, but on a big scale, and once more he has adopted sacrificial tactics to impede the advance.

With heavy artillery preparation the American line moved forward early today. It was not fast going, but woods after woods were cleaned out and villages fell before the steady push. Fires beyond the lines marked points where the Germans apparently were destroying warehouses and stores, the transportation of which might hamper their retreat.

From the bend in the Meuse to the west, flank the Americans fought their way out of the tangle of the Argonne Forest, and established a new line. Across the Meuse the village of Vilosnes was reported by aviators to have been blown to pieces by enemy mines. All bridges over the river in this section have been destroyed.

A little to the west the evacuation of Romagne appeared to be in progress, while further north trains were observed leaving for the interior. Other early reports, however, indicated heavy concentration of enemy troops at Dun, and that strong resistance might be expected.

Far to the left a number of tanks that had been working through the wilderness of the Argonne Forest made comparatively rapid progress. Most of these machines were of the small French type. With astonishing agility they moved forward, smashing wire entanglements, making their way over trenches and firing point blank at machine gunners who endeavored to check them.

Her new book is the story of a woman's faith. A faith that moves the mountain of conceit and selfishness of a man. Sweet, simple, lovable Ellen Latimer is lifted out of the steady current of a humdrum life and dropped into a social whirlpool. There is something more than interesting details in the lives of unusual people—there is a strong, almost sensational, plot. It is tense at times like a strong play. There are climaxes and an unexpected finale.

WILSON'S ADDRESS APPROVED IN PARIS

Platform Called One on Which All Nations, Including Germany, Can Stand.

CHECKS DANGER OF ALLIES

Speech Allays Deep Anxiety Over Possible Economic Boycotts and Selfish Aims.

By CHARLES H. GRASTY.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Sept. 29.—"No utterance in history ever better deserved Solomon's praise. It is a word fitly spoken and like apples of gold in pictures of silver." So spoke an old American editor this morning after reading President Wilson's speech.

It has been received here with profound satisfaction. It is regarded as disposing of certain dangers which are inherent in an alliance about to enter upon the fruits of a great victory—the danger which becomes almost as sinister and menacing as military defeat itself summarily dealt with. The President's deliverance, and the clear conception and strong purpose behind it, will bring order out of the chaos of selfish and separatist scheming and consolidate the moral might of democratic nations to the end that our victories by arms may not be balked of their noble ends. There has been deep anxiety lest projects for economic boycotts and individual advantage of various kinds should cause divisions and break allied unity.

It is well known that one of the chances which figured in the German calculations was discord and disintegration among the Allies growing out of these pernicious activities. Not all of Junkerdom is in Germany, and in every country certain reactionary, perverse groups have been at work to make our victory one of spoils instead of one for liberty and humanity. The best thought here is that the President has struck to the very heart of this mischief, and that there will be an end of it.

"It is not alone in its effects on the Allies that this momentous utterance will be telling, coming as it does at this time of great decisions," said a prominent American. "Its platform is one on which all nations, including the Germans, can stand. The President is as keen as a prophet in proclaiming every principle to the last jot, but he points a way for the German people's acceptance without humiliation. Never before has there been a moment when the hand could be held out just in this way. The military position and general situation create an opportunity which the President has magnificently seized. With this background, against which his nobility and magnanimity stand out, and in language unmistakably plain and sincere, he offers the German people impartial justice.

"Militarism must go, root and branch, but there will be no discrimination against them, and when a peace without bargaining is determined on the lines which he clearly and specifically lays down, and which absolutely excludes every possibility of abuse, the German people will be received into the common concert to oblige observance of common rights.'

"This is the precise moment of the formulatory process in actual peace conditions, and the President has performed a service for all future generations of the world in this sweeping away the side-issues which befogged the situation, and throwing on the world screen where every child can read and understand a simple statement of the things we have fought for and won, and which we must have. Through the vision and firmness of our President, who, from his serene corner, constantly sweeps far horizons and sees great events in true proportion as they pass, and who has won from allied Europe the spurs of leadership, all pitfalls will be avoided and the peace will be worthy of all the blood and tears it has cost."

LAUDS PRESIDENT'S SPEECH

Its Full Purport, Dr. Vincent Says, Is Not Yet Realized.

Dr. George E. Vincent, President of Rockefeller Foundation, who recently returned from Europe, spoke at patriotic services yesterday afternoon at St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, West End Avenue and Eighty-sixth Street.

"It is a great mistake," said Dr. Vincent, "to think that there is uniformity of war and peace ideas among the people which make up our allies. There are many different opinions in France, and Italy, and England. But at the most critical times it has been America's pride that their President has been the mouthpiece to point out the ideals for which we fight.

"President Wilson's last address is so great that it will be some time before we may realize its full meaning. He did not speak when the tide was flowing against us and the Kaiser was shedding copious tears over the complete destruction of France; he spoke in the hour of our exultation. In certain quarters our aims and our ideals will arouse antagonism, and it remains to be seen, when the statesmen crowd about the peace table, if America can bring all men into a new relationship and open up a new vista to mankind."

GERMANS ADMIT LOSING MORE GROUND

Berlin Reports a Retirement on a 17-Mile Front Before Cambrai.

SAYS AMERICANS GAINED

But Calls our Successes Local—Advances in Champagne and Belgium Also Noted.

BERLIN, (via London,) Sept. 29.—German reserves, thrown in on the Dixmude-Ypres line in Belgium, checked the allied advance Saturday afternoon, according to the official statement from German General Headquarters, after losing some positions, including artillery lines, between Dixmude and Wulverghem. Heavy attacks against Wytschaete [Messines] Ridge were repulsed.

Between the Ailette and the Aisne the German lines have been withdrawn " without enemy interference " behind the Oise-Aisne Canal.

Strong allied attacks continued on the front from the Suippe to the Meuse. In most places they were repulsed. Somme-Py was lost by the Germans, while in the Argonne the German line was moved back because of an allied advance into the Aire Valley.

American attacks gained local successes.

Following is the text of the day report:

The British, in conjunction with the Belgians extended their attacks into Flanders and renewed their attacks against Cambrai. The French and Americans attacked again in Champagne, as well as in the Argonne and on the Meuse.

From the coast to the south of Lys there was a violent artillery duel during the night, which increased to the strongest drum fire in the morning hours. Between Dixmude and Wulverghem the enemy succeeded in taking our crater positions and in pressing forward in places into our artillery lines. The enemy attack was brought to a standstill in the afternoon on the line Woumen-Clerken-Houthulst - Passchendaele - Becelaere-Zandvoorde - Hollebeke. Attacks launched in the evening against this line were repulsed with the help of reserves. The heights of Wytschaete were held against repeated enemy attacks.

West of Cambrai early yesterday (Saturday) in consequence of the loss of the canal positions [Canal du Nord?] on both sides of Marquion in Friday's fighting, we withdrew our front from open territory into rear positions on a line from Arleux to Aubigny to west of Cambrai, and behind the canal [Scheldt?] southwest of Cambrai at Marcoing, with a junction with the old line near Villers-Guislain by way of Gonnelieu. The movements were carried out during the night undisturbed by the enemy. In the morning the enemy for a long time kept the evacuated territory under fire. At midday he began to press forward sharply and attacked northwest and west of Cambrai with strong forces. He was repulsed, as were also attacks in the evening directed against our lines south of Marcoing.

Between the Ailette and the Aisne we withdrew our lines without enemy interference behind the Oise-Aisne Canal between Anizy-le-Château on the Ailette and Bourg on the Aisne. The movement, which had been prepared for some days ago, was carried out according to plan and was not disturbed by the enemy.

There were successful forefield engagements west of the Suippe (in Champagne.) Between the Suippe and the Aisne and between the Argonne and the Meuse the enemy continued his strong attacks. They were especially heavy yesterday and extraordinarily sanguinary for the enemy. Our troops fighting in this region were of all the German races and again fought magnificently despite the heavy demands made upon them in the last few days, gaining complete defensive success.

The French who attacked on the whole front between the Suippe and the Aisne, at some places as many as six times, and were led by strong squadrons of armored ' cars,' were thrown back in desperate fighting. Their only success consists in the capture of Somme-Py and in small insignificant indentations of our defense front.

In the Argonne during the night before last, in consequence of the enemy advance into the Aire Valley, we withdrew our lines as far as the region southeast of Binerville, southwest of Apremont.

Against the eastern edge of the Argonne Forest and against the line Apremont - Cierges - Brieulles the Americans lunched many attacks, partly with new divisions. They were able to gain local successes near Apremont and east of Cierges. They pressed back our lines here early in the morning as far as the Cunel and Fays Woods, but here, as well as on the remainder of the front, enemy attacks failed with very sanguinary losses as the result of our defense fire, in stubborn hand-to-hand fighting, and as the result of our successful counterattacks.

Our battle echelons attacked with great success the enemy storming east of the Aire, and in yesterday's fighting 100 enemy tanks were destroyed.

Yesterday we shot down thirty-two enemy airplanes and three captive balloons.

The official statement from General Headquarters this evening says:

There were fresh engagements east of Ypres. Tremendous fighting took place between Cambrai and St. Quentin. The British assault failed as a whole.

In Champagne and between the Argonne and the Meuse violent attacks delivered by the French and Americans were repulsed, with the exception of local breaches on both sides of Ardeuil.

WANT ONLY CAPITULATION

Expect Anything to Happen at Meeting of Sofia Parliament Scheduled for Today.

PARIS, Sept. 29.—The situation in Bulgaria, despite the importance of the triple-barreled offensive on the western front, occupies first place in public comments and general conversation here this morning. What Bulgaria's next step will be, and what Germany and Austria will do to meet the crisis in their slippery-minded ally's camp, are the two questions everybody here is asking today.

Not much belief is placed in von Hintze's statements to the Reichstag Committee yesterday to the effect that Germany and Austria both already had sent important bodies of their reserves to help Bulgaria out in her trouble. The questions naturally asked are why these reinforcements were not sent before, when Bulgaria begged so earnestly for them and was told by both the Central Empires that none could be sent. In view of von Hintze's admission that the situation really is serious, his statement that reinforcements have been sent is regarded here as merely intended to allay some of the serious alarm the Bulgar retreat and call for an armistice have undoubtedly raised in the whole enemy camp.

What is regarded here much more seriously is von Hintze's suggestion that the Bulgars were misled by the belief the situation was far graver than it was, and that Premier Malinoff and the Bulgarian command decided to throw up the sponge without consulting either their King or Parliament. This, coupled with von Hintze's statement that the reaction of Bulgarian elements faithful to Germany appears imminent, is regarded here as indicating that Germany hopes to be able, even in the present desperate circumstances, to dragoon the Bulgarians into continuing the war. The exact whereabouts of Ferdinand himself appears to be uncertain, but it is regarded here as most probable that he is at Sofia, in view of the fact that the Sobranje is due to meet there Monday.

After Monday's sitting of the Parliament, the situation undoubtedly to some extent will be made clear. At that sitting, it is felt here, anything may happen, from the overturning of Ferdinand's throne, the establishment of a Bulgar Republic, and unconditional capitulation to the Allies, to a German coup d'état which would have for its object the bolstering up of Ferdinand by German bayonets, the court-martial and possible execution of Malinoff and the present Bulgar Commander-in-Chief, and forcing back the remains of the Bulgarian armies into positions to resist the allied advance.

Despite von Hintze's statements, there is little doubt that Germany realizes that the Bulgarian defeats have made the whole enemy future desperate, and that she will stop at nothing to re-establish the situation.

Opinion here is firmly convinced that the only terms to be offered Bulgaria must be capitulation pure and simple. For Ferdinand himself France long ago decided there can be no forgiveness. It is never forgotten here that Ferdinand is the grandson of Louis Philippe, and that his mother was old Princess Clementine, the cleverest diplomatist of Europe. Somebody once called her the War Princess of France. It was from his mother that Ferdinand is reputed to have learned all he knows of intrigue and kingcraft, the practice of which has made him the modern type of the skillfully cunning Prince that Machiavelli portrayed. In France no word or act of Ferdinand will ever be trusted, and for this reason, if no other, opinion here thoroughly indorses the refusal of General Franchet d'Esperey to accord the sought-for armistice, even for forty-eight hours.

The underlying motive of the Bulgarian request is believed here to be the desire on the part of the King and Ministers to be able, by acting quickly, to jockey themselves into a position where they will be able to bargain while they have part of their plunder still in hand, and thus obtain better terms than will be possible when their country is seriously invaded. The refusal of the victorious French commander to agree to the Bulgarian demand does not mean that the Allies are unwilling to treat for peace, but simply that the defeated enemy must first acknowledge he is beaten, throw down his arms, and ask the Allies to make known their terms.

In any case, Bulgaria, after having decided to risk her whole future on the success of her sword, must accept the results of the arbitration she herself selected. It is held here that Bulgaria must either continue to fight or capitulate. Under present conditons, with the rest of her allies unsubdued, there can be no question of any definite treaty of peace. Only provisional arrangements could be made, as Bulgaria's future cannot be settled until the conference of powers which will settle everything at the end of the war. The only definite thing that can be said at present is that, whatever may happen to the other powers, Bulgaria will be muzzled in such a way that the dangerous ambitions of the Prussians of the Balkans will no longer constitute a perpetual menace to the whole peninsula.

Many persons here foresee the probability that the allied Army of Saloniki may shortly become the key to the whole Allied prospects and may, by its victories, have set in motion the whole series of happy events which will bring the war to an end much more quickly than the majority has thought possible. Not a little credit for what the Saloniki Army has already accomplished must be allotted to its inventor, Aristide Briand, who fought doggedly for its creation, and finally, in spite of persistent and often well-founded criticism, saw his plan carried into effect.

FONCK DOWNS SIX IN A DAY.

French Ace's Latest Feat Makes Total of His Victims Sixty-Six.

PARIS, Sept. 29.—Lieutenant René Fonck, the leading French aviator, brought down six enemy airplanes on Sept. 26. His total now aggregates sixty-six.

Fonck's latest feat duplicates his own record and also those of Captain Trollop and Lieutenant Claxton of the British Flying Corps.

GERMAN PRESS SCARED BUT URGES CALMNESS

Nation's Most Serious Hour, Says One Berlin Paper of Bulgarian Peace Move.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 29.—"Germany's most serious hour seems to have struck," declares the Lokal-Anzeiger of Berlin, in discussing the Bulgarian question. The Frankfurter Zeitung says:

"It is useless to gloss over this news, and we are not quite sure whether it would not be useful to attach considerable importance to the semi-official attempts to veil the threatening secession of Bulgaria or raise any hopes."

Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Company.

THE HAGUE, Sept. 28.—The Frankfurter Zeitung, writing of Bulgaria's negotiations for an armistice, says:

"If Bulgaria deserts, which is not sure, then our position will become still more serious, but there is no more ground for anxiety than there has been for the last fourteen months. The seriousness of the situation, however, demands that our people unite more than ever for national defense, and to draw up their political demands. If this succeeds, and we do not doubt it, then we shall have mastered this danger, as we have mastered so many others."

The same paper learns from Vienna that, under the impression of the alarming news from Bulgaria, Premier von Hussarek has summoned many deputies who gave information on the grave events. The Premier asked if the party leaders considered it advisable for the House of Representatives to assemble on Tuesday in view of the seriousness of the situation. The Deputies concluded it was unadvisable to postpone it.

This paper mentions rumors of a coalition Ministry for the concentration of all Parliamentary forces.

The Hungarian Premier, Wekerle, arrived in Vienna yesterday evening after an important Ministerial council in Bucharest. Emperor Carl received Foreign Minister Burian and Premier von Hussarex in a special audience, and conferred with them till a late hour.

Today's Kölnische Zeitung is informed from Berlin that the clearing up of the political and military situation in Bulgaria makes progress. The Chief of the Military Staff, Todoroff, is negotiating with the central command, it is asserted. The paper says while it would be dangerous to minimize the gravity of events for Bulgaria and for the Central Powers, the whole Bulgarian Army was not involved in the retreat, and there already are signs that the lack of courage and confidence is on the wane. Delegates nominated by Malinoff for negotiations with the enemy have not yet left Sofia, it assures its readers, as they are aware that Bulgaria's national demands can only be granted by the Central Powers.

"We have always stepped in with our sword and with our gold, and will do so in future," says the Kölnische Zeitung.

Another report from Berlin states that the German Chancellor and von Hintze attended a confidential meeting of the Main Committee today. Owing to the seriousness of the situation, it can safely be assumed that the committee will sit for some time, although some party leaders have telegraphed for their members in expectation of the Reichstag assembling. In Parliamentary circles it is considered possible that in order to clear up all misunderstandings the Main Committee may sit until November.

COPENHAGEN, Sept. 28.—All the German newspapers, according to a special dispatch from Berlin, are united in warning their readers to remain calm in the face of the unsettled Bulgarian situation. They admit that the situation is serious, but declare that the German nation will show itself capable of meeting this new contingency.

Georg Bernhard in the Vossische Zeitung declares that "it is necessary that the Chancellor, who no longer possesses the confidence of millions of German men, must leave office." He characterizes Count von Hertling as a "weary man at the rudder of the ship of State at the worst period of the war." "Germany," he says, "needs leadership, and the Chancellor is no leader."

Herr Bernhard asserts that the happenings in Bulgaria could not have come as a complete surprise to the leaders of German policy. He believes they were at least aware of the feeling prevailing in Bulgaria for the last few months.

"How," demands Herr Bernhard, "could the Chancellor make a speech without even alluding to the difficulties which might come? It is conceivable, but not fully understandable, that the Centre Party cannot summon up courage to make its old leader understand that his further continuance in office is incompatible with the welfare of the empire. But it is fully understandable that the other majority parties will under no circumstances work longer with the present Chancellor."

Vorwärts, the organ of the majority Socialists, asks its readers to consider the situation if Germany were left alone with her back against the wall fighting all the Allies. The paper draws a graphic picture of defeat with thousands dying of hunger and the land and people enslaved. It closes by an appeal to every German to stand fast.

BULGARS BURNING STORES AT USKUB

Serbians in Dash Northeast of Ishtib Are About Six Miles from Foe's Frontier.

ITALIANS NEARING KICHEVO

Tens of Thousands of Prisoners and More Than 300 Guns Reported Taken by Allies.

LONDON, Sept. 29.—Large fires are burning around the important base of Uskub, toward which the Serbians are advancing from Veles, according to the Serbian official statement of Saturday. The Serbians have captured the important mountain range of Plachkovitsa, south of Kochana. The statement reads:

Our troops had new successes on Sept. 27. They are pursuing the enemy and have taken the Plachkovitsa range and are near Charevo [northeast of Ishtib and six miles from the Bulgarian border] and St. Nicholas.

Serbian forces are now north of Veles. There are big fires around Uskub.

The Serbians alone up to the present have captured 160 guns and uncounted numbers of trench mortars and machine guns.

PARIS, Sept. 29.—The following Greek official statement, dated Saturday, was received here today:

Greek cavalry is advancing beyond Veles in pursuit of the enemy, who is in rout. The prisoners number several tens of thousands.

The Greeks co-operating with the British are advancing on Petric. Other Greek units are marching toward the east, following the Belashitza region range.

Northwest of Monastir allied troops advanced eleven miles up to Friday and along the entire front had captured more than 300 guns, according to the French official statement on operations in Macedonia, issued last night, (Saturday. The Allies also are making progress between Lake Presba and Lake Ochrida. The statement follows:

ARMY OF THE EAST, Sept. 27.—The day of the 27th was marked by a general advance along the whole front and by new captures of a large number of prisoners and important material. On the left the allied troops broke up the resistance of the enemy forces between Lakes Presba and Ochrida and pressed on. Northwest of Monastir we have made an advance of more than eighteen kilometers at certain points. We have progressed beyond Krushevo and are marching on Kichevo.

In the centre the Serbians, who entered Veles on Sept. 26 despite strong resistance by the enemy, are pushing forward on the front of Karabuniste-Rudnik, thirty-five kilometers (twenty-two miles) from Uskub. They have reached the region of Kochana and Ratavista, and cavalry units have reached the region of Lehovo, about ten kilometers (six miles) from the Bulgarian frontier.

On the right the allied forces occupied the region of Strumnitza, and are ascending the valley of the Strumnitza toward the east.

The number of guns captured is more than 300.

ROME, Sept. 29.—Italian troops are pushing vigorously their progress over the mountains northwest of Monastir, says the War Office statement today. The Bulgarians are retiring rapidly in the direction of Kichevo.

REPORT AMERICAN AIDING BULGAR ENVOYS

Our Charge, According to a Berlin Dispatch, Is Playing a Large Part in Negotiations.

LONDON, Monday, Sept. 30.—An American, said to be the American Chargé d'Affaires at Sofia, accompanied the Bulgarian delegates to Saloniki to confer with the allied command relative to an armistice, according to a Berlin telegram received here by the way of Copenhagen.

It is said by the telegram that "he apparently played a very important part in recent events."

A recent Congressional Directory gives the name of no one attached to the Bulgarian - Rumanian - Serbian mission (of which Vopicka is the head as Minister) as secretary. The only persons listed are the Military Attaché, Lieut. Col. H. E. Yates, and his assistants, Lieutenants R. B. Andrews and E. H. Rotte.

GERMANS RETIRING FROM RUMANIA

front during the greatest struggle she has experienced there. Probably Austria also will be called upon for help.

The news from Bulgaria, which comes through various channels, however, compels the belief that the Prussia of the Balkans is not merely seeking a breathing spell, but really wants peace. All the evidence indicates that she needs it grievously and must have it. The German pretense that Premier Malinoff was acting on his own responsibility finds no confirmation. King Ferdinand's crown apparently is at stake, and he is trying to save his dynasty. The latest developments seem to confirm reports that the King's long absence from his kingdom during the Summer was because he was afraid to remain there.

While Bulgaria has been disintegrating for months as a factor in the war her military defeat has brought matters swiftly to a crisis. Her three armies are separated, and not only are beaten, but two of them are scattered in flight with their German allies sharing the same fate. Yesterday's official report from the front speaks of the number of prisoners taken, and points out that most of them were Germans.

According to the Berlin Vaterland an American attaché will participate with the Bulgarian delegates in the armistice negotiations.

German papers are now speaking freely about their Allies.

"From the day of Malinoff's appointment," says Vorwärts, "it was well known in political circles that our alliance was in the greatest danger. In addition to the Cabinet's pro-Entente sentiments there is an extraordinarily ardent desire for peace on the part of the people whose food for months has been crumbling and indigestible maize bread. Even if the supporters of our alliance should succeed in getting the upper hand we should indulge in no illusions regarding the value which the preservation of the alliance can still have for Germany."

A Man is never Old until he stops Learning New Things

The Gillette Experts are doing a Great Service to the Gillette owners of this city—Free of Charge

SOME men seem to have missed the "little knack" of holding the Gillette with the blade almost flat against the face.

So we have put our Service Experts on duty in this city again.

You'll find them in stores convenient to every part of town.

They will show you the Gillette "little knack," and how it makes a wonderful difference in the quality and smoothness of your Gillette shave.

ANOTHER thing. Perhaps your razor would be better for a slight adjustment.

Bring it with you. Let our Experts examine it. Even if it is old or worn or damaged, they can probably put it in first-class shape again, without charge.

EVERY upstanding American is willing to learn something that'll save him time, increase his comfort, and improve his personal appearance.

He wants to develop that clean, alert brightness and healthy ruddiness that go with a well-kept face.

The Gillette is adjustable—gives a velvet-smooth shave, cool, comfortable, free from all irritation.

BLADES always sharp — always ready. No Stropping—No Honing.

Every time you shave yourself you save fees and tips that will buy more U. S. Thrift Stamps or go toward a payment on another Liberty Bond.

Are You Getting Maximum Results From Your Gillette

The Gillette Service Experts and all Gillette dealers want to be of service to every Gillette user in town.

They will show you that "little knack" of the Gillette shave—how to prepare the face for shaving; the correct angle-strokes; the adjustment for a light or a close shave.

Bring in your Gillette, have it looked over. It may be damaged, bent, out of alignment. If so, they will put it in first-class condition again, free of charge. They may make some valuable suggestions, anyway.

When you shave tomorrow morning try this—

Lather the beard thoroughly, and rub well in—that's essential with any shave.

Put in a new blade and screw the handle down tight. Then, if you want a specially close shave, unscrew the handle a slight turn.

Hold the razor naturally and easily, and tilt the handle so you can just feel the blade engage the beard.

(Here's where some men make a mistake. They tilt the handle up or down too much.)

Then shave with short, slanting strokes.

Keep the edge of the blade as nearly flat against the skin as you can. Any man will catch the "little knack" of using his Gillette in one or two shaves. In fact, when the Gillette is properly used the beard slips off without your knowing it.

The all-important thing is to lather well, and to hold the razor easily, with the handle tilted so the blade just engages the beard.

Gillette Safety Razor Company, Boston, Mass.

FRED STONE JOINS THE FILM ACTORS

As "The Goat" He Is an Athletic Ironworker Among Movie Heroes.

MANY FILMS AID THE LOAN

Dorothy Gish in "Battling Jane" at Rivoli, Will Hart at Rialto, "Pals First" at Broadway.

Stepping from the stage to the screen, Fred Stone sheds the many costumes and much make-up behind which he has been accustomed to hide his hair and his emphasized features in "The Wizard of Oz," "Chin-Chin," and "Jack o' Lantern," and appears as his natural self at the Strand this week, even down to the powerful arms and shoulders revealed by a thin athletic undershirt. Many persons who go to see his first Artcraft picture, "The Goat," will learn what the man really looks like—and the chances are they will like his looks.

Stone in the photoplay is Chuck McCarthy, the "goat" of a motion picture studio; that is, as a title on the screen informs one, "the guy who does all of the rough work and gets none of the credit." As an extra man he substitutes for Marmaduke X. Caruthers in all of the risky business of Marmaduke's rôle as a daredevil of the movies, and when he is finally injured Marmaduke is hurried off conspicuously to the hospital to get all of the publicity and popular acclaim of an injured hero, while Chuck is sneaked to his humble home to read in the newspapers about Marmaduke's accident and engagement to the French movie queen, who speaks her acquired language with a Hoboken accent and toward whom the camera-struck ironworker had cast his eyes. In disillusionment he finds his true love in the person of his first sweetheart—and all is well.

This story gives the athletic Stone opportunities for all of the stunts he does on the stage and a few more. He swings by his feet over a pool of water, walks up a flag pole as if it were a flight of stairs, handles a rope in a way to make Will Rogers shake his hand, and skates with his well-known vigor.

The exhibition of Liberty Loan films contributed by the stars of the screen began yesterday and will change daily at the leading theatres. Charlie Chaplin appeared in "The Bond" at the Strand and Rivoli and apparently succeeded well in the effort of his production—to make people laugh and think about buying bonds.

Delightful Dorothy Gish—the adjective just seems to stick to her name—makes her first appearance as an independent Paramount star at the Rivoli this week in "Battling Jane," and that will be good news to many. Miss Gish has unusual pantomimic ability. She can make a part comprehensible and real without the aid of interrupting lines. Her acting suggests the bit of verse anent the complete death of the little dog Rover—when she acts she acts all over. It is a positive delight to watch her.

In "Battling Jane" she has a part similar to that of the Little Disturber in "Hearts of the World." As a carefree vagabond she appears in a New England village—or a Southern or a Western or any other kind of village—and adopts an abandoned child because there is no one else to adopt it. Her battles follow with the child's brutish father, a crook, and with the deafness of a storekeeper, with a rain storm, and almost everything else that could be assembled against her.

William S. Hart in the rôle of an outlaw who reforms and overcomes Mexican bandits and German spies in order to establish himself as fit material for the United States Army, appears in the headliner of the Rialto program, "The Border Wireless." "Tales of the Tall Timber," a Robert C. Bruce scenic study, is also on the bill.

"Pals First," with Harold Lockwood, opened the week at the Broadway yesterday afternoon.

DR. GEER'S FAREWELL.

Quits St. Paul's After Thirty-one Years' Service as Pastor.

The Rev. Dr. W. Montague Geer, who announced last Spring that he would retire in a few months as pastor of St. Paul's Chapel, in the Trinity Parish, at Broadway and Fulton Street, last night bade farewell to his congregation there after thirty-one years' service. In his final sermon Dr. Geer said that he was retiring because he thought "in these strenuous wartimes the work of the chapel, with its magnificent opportunities, would be done better by a younger man."

After he had finished the services Dr. Geer took his place at the door of the chapel and shook hands with the several hundred members of the congregation as they passed out. In his announcement of his retirement, in his sermon and at his farewell at the door, Dr. Geer asserted that he was to remain as vicar emeritus of the chapel. His successor has not been chosen by the Vestry.

He reviewed the work of the chapel for the last 150 years, during the period when George Washington was a member of the congregation, and during the last thirty years. Dr. Geer has two sons in the service and he will spend part of his time now in war work.

TELLS OF ASSAULT AND ROBBERY IN AUTO

Victim of Van Cortlandt Park Attack Says He is Marquis Delafari, a Foreign Agent.

A man who said he was the Marquis Delafari, a secret service agent for a foreign Government, was found unconscious and with fractured skull early yesterday morning in an automobile on Broadway, near 242d Street. He was taken to St. Joseph's Hospital at Yonkers, where, in moments of consciousness, he told of being attacked in the car and said he had been robbed of $4,800, and important papers which had been intrusted to him for delivery at New London, Conn.

Delafari's clothing was torn and slashed, as if by a knife in a search of his pockets. Other articles taken from him, he said, included a diamond pin and ring and two gold rings. The wound in his head had been made with a club or an iron bar, the physicians thought.

A woman automobilist whose name has not been obtained by the police reported Delafari's plight to Harry Williams, a soldier. She told Williams that she had seen a car stalled a block south on Broadway, and had seen the arm of a man hanging over the side of the auto. Williams went to the place indicated and found Delafari alone in the car. The soldier got a taxicab and took Delafari to the hospital. When the police were notified and sought to find the car from which Delafari had been removed it had disappeared.

United States Secret Service men and detectives from Inspector Cray's staff went to Yonkers to question Delafari. Delafari said he had come from Washington, where he had been a guest at the New Willard Hotel, and that he had arrived at the Pennsylvania Station here at 7 o'clock on Saturday evening. He said he went directly to the Knickerbocker Hotel and registered under the name of "Martin."

Officers who questioned Delafari could not understand his assertion that two army officers were with him in the car. He referred to them as "Major" and "Lieutenant," both of whom he had met at the hotel. Those officers, said Delafari, had stopped the car and alighted when it reached Van Cortlandt Park, one of them remarking that it was necessary to find a place to get more gasoline. Shortly after the two men had crossed the street, Delafari asserted, some one approached the car unseen and hit him on the head.

Police Lieut. Duane of the Eighth Branch Bureau, the Bronx, who had questioned Delafari, went to the Knickerbocker and found that the only guest there named Martin was a Lieutenant in the navy, who said he had never heard of Delafari. Further doubt of Delafari's statement concerning the robbery came when Delafari refused to say who were his employers, but continued to intimate that he was a foreign secret service agent. Nor would he disclose the name of the person to whom his "important" papers were to be delivered.

ZIONISTS ACCLAIM DOWNFALL OF TURKS

Carnegie Hall Meeting's Enthusiasm Finds Outlet in $1,000,000 Loan Subscriptions.

PRESIDENT'S NAME CHEERED

Secretary Daniels Lauded for Relief Work in Palestine—Hundreds of Loan Subscriptions.

The destruction of the Turkish armies in Palestine by the forces under General Allenby, and the assurance of the re-establishment of a Jewish State based on the approval by President Wilson and Secretary Balfour of the Zionist movement were the subjects of a great demonstration at Carnegie Hall last night, where a celebration was held by the Zionist organization of America.

The enthusiasm took practical shape in that subscriptions of more than $1,000,000 to the Liberty Loan were announced at the meeting. The mention of General Allenby and of President Wilson's promises for small nations brought the audience again and again to its feet. The guest of honor at the meeting was Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels, who was repeatedly lauded for his work in relieving the Jews in Palestine by sending warships loaded with food and by carrying thousands away to places of safety.

"Let my presence here tonight," he said, "testify to my great pleasure that President Wilson had finally uttered the word that you have been waiting for so long, so eagerly, to hear, the word which by your sacrifices, by your devotion to your history and to your traditions, by your staunchness in the cause of humanity, by your surpassing loyalty to the cause of America and that of its associates in this war, you have so well deserved to hear. President Wilson, in his letter to that splendid American, Rabbi Wise, spoke for the whole American people, when he expressed his satisfaction with the progress of the Zionist movement in American and Allied countries.

"It was quite in accord with the lofty conceptions that underlie the Zionist movement as a whole that you, the American contingent, at your recent convention should have laid it down as one of the fundamental principles of the future government of Palestine, that the fullest measure of religious liberty for all the inhabitants of the land should prevail, Jew and non-Jew alike. As one who has some little knowledge of the genius of Israel, I feel that I have the right to proclaim here my innermost conviction that the National Jewish Homeland will be the model land of which your immortal leader, Theodore Herzl, dreamed and wrote. And by the very wording of his letter to Dr. Wise, I feel that I have the right to say that this, too, is the conviction of President Wilson."

Judge Julian W. Mack, who presided at the meeting last night, after referring to men in British uniform, soldiers of the Jewish Legion, who were on the platform with him, and other leaders of the Zionist movement, said:

"Shall we ever forget the thrill of joy that electrified every Jewish soul, here in America, and there yonder where the night of oppression has not yet ended for our people—shall we ever forget the thrill that lifted us to the heights of exaltation when we read that wonderful message from the great leader of humanity in which he expressed his satisfaction with the progress of Zionism in the United States and allied countries since the British declaration in favor of establishing in Palestine a national home for the Jewish people? For all time, for so long as memory endures, for so long a time as it shall be given to Israel to have a place in the world, the gratitude of the Jewish people will go out to him who has made the beginning of this year so glorious for us, shall go out to our great President, to Woodrow Wilson."

Dr. Stephen S. Wise, who was described by Secretary Daniels as "the huskiest shipbuilder in America," made a stirring appeal for the purchase of Liberty Bonds, and blanks were passed among the audience. Hundreds of subscriptions were received. The following large subscriptions, totaling $1,000,000, were announced: The Chicago Zionist Committee, $500,000; Jacob H. Schiff, $100,000; Peter Schweitzer, $100,000; the Pittsburgh Zionist Committee, $100,000; Nathan Straus, $50,000; the New Orleans Zionist Committee, $50,000; Mrs. Joseph Fels, $40,000; L. Maurice Fechheimer, $25,000; Louis Robinson and brothers, $15,000; Ben May, $10,000; Harry Freidenwald, $5,000; J. W. Mack and family, $4,000; B. A. Rosenblatt, $1,000; Mr. Sauber, $1,000. Other subscriptions brought the total considerably over $1,000,000.

Other speakers were Jacob de Haas, Dr. B. Z. Mossinsohn, Rabbi Mordecai, M. Kaplan and Morris Rothernberg.

CLIMBS OUT ON WING OF BURNING AIRPLANE

Capt. Tricket Saves His Life and That of His Pilot by Daring Exploit.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY NORTHWEST OF VERDUN, Sept. 29, (By The Associated Press.)—Captain Charles T. Tricket of Sander, Texas, acting as an observer, today saved his own life and that of his pilot by a thrilling exploit in the air. The gasoline tank of the airplane was set on fire by a German aviator's machine gun while the American machine was fighting a thousand yards in the air in the region of Nantillois.

When the fire burst from the tank between the seats of the pilot and the observer, Captain Tricket made desperate efforts to extinguish the flames, which the wind was forcing in his direction. To remain in his seat meant to be burned to death.

Captain Tricket's only recourse was to climb out on the wing of the machine and cling to the wires. This he did, and the pilot then steered the machine safely to earth.

B'NAI B'RITH CELEBRATES.

Notable Exercises in Chicago Mark Anniversary of Order.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 29.—Prominent Jews from all parts of the United States are in Chicago for the celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, as well as the fiftieth anniversary of Grand Lodge No. 6, comprising the Chicago district. The convention will last until Wednesday night.

Today's proceedings began with a service of thanksgiving at Sinai Temple, at which an address was delivered by Dr. Edward N. Calisch of Richmond, Va., in the absence of Dr. Emil G. Hirsch, who is ill. There followed a luncheon to the members of the National Executive Committee of the B'nai B'rith at the Covenant Club. Adolf Kraus of Chicago is President of the National Executive Committee; the other members, most of whom were present, including Lucius Solomon, First Vice President, San Francisco; Theobald Mack, Second Vice President, New Orleans; Jacob Furth, Treasurer, St. Louis; Charles Hartman, New York; Jacob Singer, Philadelphia; Dr. Edward N. Calisch, Richmond; Simon Wolf, Washington; Henry Morgenthau, New York; A. B. Seelenfreund, Chicago, Grand Secretary, and Philip Stein, Chicago.

In the evening there was a mass-meeting at the Auditorium, presided over by Adolf Kraus, at which a service flag of the Order of B'nai B'rith, which has given 3,256 of its 40,000 members to the cause of democracy, was dedicated. The speakers included Governor Frank O. Lowden, Dr. Calisch and Lucius Solomon. Telegrams of congratulation were read from nearly all the members of President Wilson's Cabinet, as well as from many United States Senators.

CHARLES HOLDS COUNCIL.

Hussarek Denies Austria's Attitude to War Has Changed.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 29. — Emperor Charles presided at a meeting of the Crown Council at Vienna yesterday, according to a dispatch to the Berlin Tageblatt. The meeting lasted into the night and the chief subject was the foreign situation, particularly Bulgaria.

Premier von Hussarek, according to another dispatch, told newspaper men that there was no foundation to reports that Austria-Hungary had changed her attitude toward the war.

process of law in his case, and in Secretary Lansing's reply, delivered June 4, the American Government stated its attitude toward threats of reprisal.

"The threat of the German Government to retaliate by making Americans in Germany suffer," said Secretary Lansing in that note, "clearly implies that the German Government proposes to adopt the principle that reprisals occasioning physical suffering are legitimate and necessary in order to enforce demands from one belligerent to another. The Government of the United States acknowledges no such principle and would suggest that it would be wise for the German Government to consider that if it acts upon that principle it will inevitably be understood to invite similar reciprocal action on the part of the United States with respect to the great numbers of German subjects in this country. It is assumed that the German Government before acting will give due reflection and due weight to this consideration."

In the present German note it is alleged, with other assertions, that a repeating shotgun was captured from prisoners taken on July 27, who belonged to the 307th Regiment of the Seventy-seventh Division. The 307th Infantry Regiment of the Seventy-seventh National Army Division is composed of drafted soldiers from New York City, who were trained at Yaphank, L. I.

The use of shotguns is not denied by officials in high authority in the War Department. It is understood they were first used by the Marines in Belleau Wood. As to the ballistic or other characteristics of the weapons, army officers are silent only because they consider this to be military information that should not be divulged in detail. But it is vigorously denied that there is any violation of any international convention in the use of these weapons.

American officials resent this attempt to make it appear that the American Army is not fighting according to recognized laws, and are inclined to retort by reciting the long list of German frightfulness.

By The Hague Convention of 1899 it was prohibited "to employ arms, projectiles, or material of a nature to cause superfluous injury." When The Hague Convention regarding hostilities on land was redrafted in 1907 it was forbidden "to employ arms, projectiles, or material calculated to cause unnecessary suffering." This is strained by the Berlin Government to cover repeating shotguns. It is not so construed by the Washington Government.

The number of clear violations of The Hague Convention by Germany is so great that these international agreements are now not binding on the opponents of Germany, even though there is no disposition on the part of the allied forces to act in contravention of them or of the rules of civilized warfare.

Shotguns Used in Police Work.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 29, (Associated Press.)—Shotguns are used by American troops in general police work and in guarding prisoners, being more desirable for such work than the high-powered army rifle, because the firing of the latter might result in the death or injury of persons it was not intended to hit.

Germany's threat of reprisals is not causing any anxiety among American officials. The Americans hold 100 German prisoners to every ten Americans in enemy prison camps.

MORGAN. OF RAIDERS, DIES.

Colonel Last Survivor of Brother He Saved in Ohio.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Sept. 29.—Colonel Richard C. Morgan, who served in the Confederate Army as a member of the staff of his brother, General John H. Morgan, a famous Confederate leader, is dead here at the age of 82 years. He was the last remaining one of six brothers who fought for the South. The Tilford family of New York were among their relatives.

Colonel Morgan was well known throughout the East. When General Morgan's forces during the civil war fought their way through Northern Ohio, Colonel Morgan saved the life of his brother, the General, by exchanging clothes and prison cells with him at the Federal Penitentiary at Columbus, Ohio.

"REINFORCING" BULGARIA.

If the hints in the German papers represent the truth, Bulgaria's independence is about to be extinguished. The Deutsche Tageszeitung of Berlin says that German armies will pass through Sofia, "so that the Bulgarian "population will see that forces are "being sent to their assistance." The Neue Freie Presse of Vienna says that the Bulgarian forces "have been re-"moved from the control of the Bul-"garian Army command." These plain intimations of the intention of Germany to crush the Bulgarian people and enslave the Bulgarian Army are probably exaggerated; they are only threats which Germany cannot carry out. But if they could be carried out, they would be; and from this proposed treatment of Bulgaria as if she were an unruly colony we can see how foolish it has been to regard her, hitherto, as having any individuality. She was simply a province of the German Empire, and at any sign of revolt Germany was prepared to hurl aside her nominal rulers and take command herself; to "remove the "Bulgarian forces from the control of "the Bulgarian Army command." The German province has revolted, and if Germany cannot carry out the threat it is not for lack of will. It is because of FOCH, PETAIN, HAIG, PERSHING, ALLENBY, FRANCHET D'ESPEREY.

These nominal "reinforcements" which Germany and Austria are hurrying to Bulgaria are sent for the purpose of subduing what in German jargon would be called the "will to peace" of the Bulgarian people. That people has been subsisting, they tell us, on "crumbling and indigestible maize bread." It had nothing to say about going to war, it has never said anything about continuing it, but now, on a diet of maize bread, it develops a "will to peace"; so strong a will to peace that MALINOFF becomes Premier and "Czar" FERDINAND leaves the country. Presently the army and the people become of one mind and sue for peace, making also some unpleasant "anti-dynastic demonstrations"; in other words, expressing riotously their opinion of their "Czar" for getting them into this scrape. Whereupon German troops are hurried to Bulgaria "so "that the Bulgarian population will "see that forces are being sent to "their"—yes, that is the ironic phrase—"to their assistance."

These troops cannot be sent from the west front. Germany must get them from somewhere else; so she draws them from the garrison of Rumania, and makes her Austrian serf draw more from Albania. The withdrawal from Rumania is so large that it is reported that Germany is evacuating that country. If she does, Rumania's hour and that of gallant Queen MARIE has come again. The Rumanian Army will be reconstituted, and when it sweeps again into Transylvania there will be no treacherous Russian "protector" to stab it from behind. If German reports are at all to be trusted, the signs of unrest in Rumania have already been so noticeable and so deep as to give Berlin a great deal of uneasiness.

And the Austrian reinforcements from Albania, what of them? There is an Italian army waiting impatiently to sweep over Albania and drive the Austrians out. How many troops can Austria withdraw from that front without giving Albania up completely? And the capture of Albania by Italy opens a new road into Austria. Taking these things into consideration, we may safely conclude that the Deutsche Tageszeitung is exaggerating wildly when it talks of "great masses" of reinforcements being sent to Bulgaria; that is, unless Germany is prepared to let Rumania and Albania go and trust to luck to get them back again. We may also conclude that such troops as are being sent are being sent for the purpose of reducing the Bulgarian population to order and silence and making the Bulgarian Army crouch before the master's whip.

What do the Germans think their precious reinforcements can do? This is not the hour for Teutonic victory, whether the Bulgarian Army is "re-"moved from the control of the Bul-"garian Army command" and put under Teutons or not. If there were a breathing spell, if there were no enemy in front rushing rapidly over Bulgarian soil, there might be a chance to do something. But the British, French, Italians, and Serbs are not merely undertaking an adventure like the Charge of the Light Brigade; they did not make the attack without being prepared for the coming of reinforcements, and they will not be stopped by it. Neither will they dream of negotiating a peace with Bulgaria so long as Germany continues to use her.

THE LOAN DRIVE BEGINS.

That the raising of the Liberty Loan started off with a splendid rush is no reason for overconfidence; there should be none of that until the last dollar and the last minute. This city raised, on the first day, twice as much as it raised on the first day of the last loan, but then the loan is exactly twice as large as the last one. Experience has shown that the beginning and the end of the loan drives are where the money comes in, and that they sag in the middle. Therefore let not the splendid record made on the first day and made the country over lead any one to believe that this $6,000,000,000 loan can be raised without hard work, or that anybody is entitled to take it easy because he has subscribed to three other loans.

The last loan was raised when it looked dark for the allied cause; this one is being raised as the skies lighten. The incorrigible American optimism, always ready to think that all is over but the shouting as soon as the first returns come in, should not be allowed to slacken for a moment the rush of dollars. The skies have only lightened, the sun is not out yet. The Germans are still only seventy miles from Paris and about 350 miles from Berlin. The sun of victory is a bribable sun; it takes dollars to bring him out, and without them he stays behind the cloud. The American people understand thoroughly that their dollars right just as their guns do. If it is an effort to raise six billions, so it is an effort to get from St. Mihiel to Metz; while the boys abroad make the one effort, it is up to the men and women at home to make the other.

Fort Dodge, Iowa, raised its whole quota, $2,000,000, at midnight Friday; ten hours later St. Albans, Vt., reported an oversubscription of $30,000, and they were followed by a flood of others. Let us give a cheer for them and then buckle down to seeing what we can do with our bigger task. If we can't do it so quickly, let us be sure we do it in the same spirit and with the same effort.

SUFFRAGE IN THE SENATE.

"Codlin's the friend, not Short." The heat and fury of the "colloquy" or intellectual collision between Senator PITTMAN of Nevada and Senator SMOOT of Utah in the Senate Friday, the artless contention, all along, of Republican and Democratic politicians as to which party loves woman suffrage more or "saw it first," are contained and prefigured, like so many other things, in the familiar text from DICKENS. "I think that three-"fourths of woman suffrage is pol-"itics," says Senator REED of Missouri. "I think that three-fourths of its support in this body is politics." The computation is, if anything, too modest.

When Mr. REED talks about "pledges to female lobbyists or male lobbyists," he relapses into the jargon of political palaeontology. The lobbyist is extinct. One of those few gentlemen of the old school who still wear queues at Richmond or Washington sixty years ago wouldn't stir as much marvel at the Capitol now as the appearance, the resurrection, of a lobbyist. Missionaries, evangelists, co-porteurs of feminism there may be; captainesses of "monster" petitions, persuaders of the minds, consumers of the time of Senators; stern-eyed watchers, charming or austere perfect women, nobly planned to warn, to bulldoze, and command; but lobbyists, never!

Senator JONES of New Mexico, perhaps the most faithful janitor of the feminist ark, seems to have caught that equilibrium of judgment, that sense of proportion, which distinguishes some of the feminine feminists. He opposed vainly a week-end adjournment so that Senators who were to speak at the beginning of the Fourth Liberty Loan campaign in divers cities might go away from Washington without losing their vote on the suffrage amendment. "I know of no more important measure than this," said the New Mexican Senator. Delightful avowal! Feminism is "catching."

Or isn't there a wink, visible to the initiated, in all the fervors and angers of the active suffrage Senators? They are so eager to postpone. The most important measure is not to be voted on, as Senator LODGE of the Antis rightly holds, "until all are here." It "must not be decided by a thinned Senate." Even when all the absentees are back there is likely to be no vote. The suffragists lack two Senators. Unless some swift transforming Saul-Paul conversion takes place, where are those missing ones to be found? There is something touching in the feminist dream that Senator DREW of New Hampshire, a sound conservative, was to vote "Aye" because his predecessor, GALLINGER, was a suffragist. Drowning women catch at straws. There will be no roll call on the amendment unless the miraculous conversion occurs. If the most important measure can't be put through the Senate before the elections, nobody will be allowed to forget that it was the other side, it was the wicked Republicans or it was the wicked Democrats, that halted the march of feminism.

THE FAR-FLUNG LINE.

From the English Channel to the River Jordan the whole battlefront is flaming, and all along it rings the news of victory. Only on the Italian front is there no great operation under way, and we know enough of the plan of campaign by now to be sure that that front is waiting orders. It may be that the Bulgarian defeat is the thing to unleash that front.

There never was such a far-flung battleline in the history of the world; a battleline that begins in Belgium and reaches to Palestine, practically all in action at once. While the Belgians and Serbs dash forward to reclaim their homes, Jewish troops help to win back their ancestral places. The battleline begins in the flat lands of Belgium, stretches across the north and east of France, dips down to the Macedonian ridges and turns south down the border of the Syrian desert, into which tattered remnants of the destroyed Turkish armies are fleeing. Victory everywhere; everywhere "the "sons of night, astonished after short "triumph, do recoil;" the sons of liberty "flying at them, with the temper "of cat-o'-mountain, or demon in-"carnate; which no son of night can "stand!"

And even this is not all; for there are other battlelines. There is a battleline in North Russia, where the German-paid troops of the Bolsheviki are being driven back, and one in Siberia, where the Germans themselves and their Bolshevist allies are being forced across a continent. But the eyes of the world are not fixed there, but on the one great battleline that runs from Flanders southeast to the Plain of Armageddon. British cavalry scoured that plain the other day, driving back the Turks; this more than continental battle would not have been dramatically complete with that feature left out.

THE LUSITANIA IN GERMANY.

The prize for magnificent mendacity for all time should surely be given to the Stockholm Aftonbladet, which on Aug. 17, according to transcripts published in German papers, printed a full though false account of the suit brought here against the Cunard Company by heirs of passengers lost on the Lusitania, winding up with the statement that the Cunard Line lost the case. And so, observes the Aftonbladet, "the decision has been given in "the Lusitania tragedy. The respon-"sibility for the loss of so many hu-"man lives rests on the shoulders of "those who turned the passenger "steamer into a munitions ship."

Now the fact is, of course, that the decision in this case expressly freed the Cunard Company from liability for damages, holding that "the cause of "the sinking of the Lusitania was the "illegal act of the Imperial German "Government." Judge MAYER further observed that the Lusitania was not and never had been armed, and that she did not carry any explosives—that is, any munitions which could be set off by fire or contact. Yet the Aftonbladet repeats the old German story of the cargo of explosives, of the American law forbidding the carrying of explosives and passengers on the same ship, and of the criminal lightheartedness of passengers who refused to listen to BERNSTORFF'S advertisement warning them off. The torpedo, declares this not very worthy specimen of Swedish journalism, would have sunk the ship, but so slowly that all the passengers could have been saved. It was the explosion of the munitions that did the damage.

Not the least noteworthy fact about this amazing story is that it was published, and republished in Germany, several days before the actual decision was given. But if you have made up your mind to tell a good-sized lie, you might as well tell it at once and get it off your mind.

Now eventually English and American papers with true reports of the trial will reach Germany. Publication of this story, and still more the publication of comment on it, leads one to surmise either that the German Government knows that these papers will come only to an inner circle which already knows the truth about the Lusitania and does not care, or else that the popular German idea on the subject is so firmly fixed that nothing can shake it. At any rate, the Swedish fiction brought forth an entertaining series of further inventions from the celebrated Dr. GEORGE BARTHELME of the Kölnische Zeitung. Dr. BARTHELME is a great man for inside information. He has some about the Lusitania. The Swedish story about the munitions fills him with satisfaction, but it is not enough. The Lusitania was armed; he knows it, and some day the truth will out. "In America," he says, "the con-"viction that the Lusitania was "armed could not be suppressed," and no doubt the guns were put under cover as she came into port and uncovered when she steamed out to sea once more.

But this is not all the learned doctor knows. "Well-informed persons in Washington"—knowing the doctor's record, one suspects his barber—told him long after America declared war that our Government knew that the Lusitania had been "doctored" so as to sink rapidly. The watertight doors were not closed, (the court found that they were,) and a still worse "sea crime" had been committed: "the so-called portholes were "open, which was against all mari-"time law; their very name indi-"cates that they may be opened only "in port." But the court found that on the day before the sinking—that is, when the liner entered the danger zone—"adequate orders were given to close all ports."

It is a wonder he stopped short of saying that the submarine was British.

THE FEDERAL HEALTH SERVICE.

Senator WEEKS's bill for the appropriation of $1,000,000 for the Federal Health Service shows a better appreciation of the national duty than the recent failure to get $22,000 for the same purpose. If $300,000 is right for the protection of the sheep of a Western State against coyotes, a million is none too much for protection against the spread of influenza. There is no proof that there is relation of cause and effect between the epidemic and the laxity of the Federal health authorities at New York, but the country will feel easier when the million is available, and the necessity for authorizing it puts the Quarantine officials on their guard.

Surely the lives of human beings are more important than the lives of animals, and yet more is spent for the protection of the health of animals than for national protection of the lives of citizens. No doubt generosity in the protection of the health of animals is due in part to the regard for human health, and in part to the fact that animals are incapable of self-sanitation. But men and women may care for themselves individually, and yet be stricken by disease by causes which they individually cannot control any more than the beasts of the field. Complete protection against disease is not practicable, but that is no reason against doing what is practicable upon the subject which has been brought to the attention of Congress.

WHY A SHUTTLE?

Recent experience may give the idea to some that the east and west shuttle trains on Forty-second Street are a necessity to the dual subway system, and that the defective working of the dual system trains north and south shows that they are a poor substitute for the service which it displaces. As a matter of fact, the shuttle inconveniences prove nothing because the dual system is so incomplete that no true idea of its final effect is given. The shuttle was not part of the first or original subway, because the trains gave a service diagonally through Manhattan Island, without transfer by the passengers except between local and express trains. That route was taken because the earlier protests of property owners prevented the construction of the original subway through the only diagonal street in the city, Broadway.

They paid a pretty penalty in the depreciation of their property, as business left it for the Z route, which created a new quasi-diagonal route along other streets. It was their action which created the Forty-second Street problem, and eventually it will prove a blessing in disguise. All that the breakdown of the shuttle shows is that it was a mistake to expect the 1,300,000 passengers who ride north and south daily to change their habits on a day's notice. The improved working of the shuttle trains reopened on Saturday is partly the result of better appreciation of the direct services on the east and west sides, and partly the better working out of the plans of shuttle operation. When the lesson is fully learned the shuttle will be used by such a fraction of travel that it will become a sort of rapid transit appendix.

That blessing cannot be realized until the Queens tunnel is extended to Times Square and the new tunnels to Brooklyn are opened. When the time between Times Square and Brooklyn is reduced to less than a quarter of an hour in express trains without a transfer there will be a great reduction in the number of those wanting to ride through Forty-second Street. The same is true of all who wish to use the shuttle to gain access to Queens Borough. In other words, the original subway was for the accommodation chiefly of the old City of New York, Manhattan and the Bronx. The dual subway is for the accommodation of all boroughs, and will succeed in proportion that passengers are carried between their destinations without transfers except between express and local trains.

Thus it appears that the necessity of the shuttle at all is due to a defect in the city plan, not in the dual subway plan. The necessity of the shuttle as a means of travel between the west side of Manhattan and Fourth Avenue will decrease as the dual system approaches operation according to its design, and as riders adjust their residences to the dual subway system rather than to the original system. The chief advantage to Brooklyn riders in the new privileges opened on Saturday is that they can now ride between Times Square and their home borough, and way stations, in express trains all the way. That is the result of giving transfers between the east and west routes in Manhattan at both Wall and William Streets and Rector and Wall Streets. Rector Street is a local stop, and it is a mystery why it was selected for a transfer station, unless with intention to discourage its use by a double transfer. The other alterations in the shuttle service are of less importance, but they are an improvement if not completely successful. There is not complete separation of the currents of travel, and there is the familiar collision between those wishing to enter and leave all trains because it must be done on the same side of the cars. Still, a great step is taken toward making the shuttle transfer unnecessary for most, and that is the measure of the improvement.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

A Chance for Public Employment.

Recent remarks in this column about the utilization in Maryland of convict labor for purposes directly or indirectly connected with the war have brought to the office a letter from BURDETTE G. LEWIS, the New Jersey Commissioner of Charities and Correction, a letter of interest. In it he first expressed the antagonism which all enlightened people feel for the farming out of prisoners to private employers, a practice which almost invariably has resulted in scandals and abuses, Maryland being one of the few States where it survives. The Yates law of 1887 stopped it in New York, and the prohibition was affirmed and strengthened by inclusion in the Constitution of 1894. But Mr. LEWIS, and others like him, nevertheless believe that the industrial efficiency of convicts, such as it is, should not be wasted, and with the approval of his State Administration he has suggested to the Federal Government a plan of utilization which, by forbidding that "the labor or time of any inmate of any of the institutions or the profit or product of his work shall be let, contracted for, leased, farmed out, given, or sold to any person, firm, or corporation, except to departments of the State or subdivisions thereof, or except to the United States or subdivisions thereof," suggests what the originators of the plan consider the right solution of the problem. President WILSON has further stipulated that contracts for prison labor or for the purchase of its products can be made by the Government only when the prisoners receive wages similar to those paid to free labor. The New Jersey plan also assumes that it is necessary in order to afford sufficient incentive to prisoners to provide a possibility to those who are mentally, morally, and physically fit to participate actually in the war as fighting units if they are able, by hard struggle, to win the right to do so, and that work of various sorts on behalf of the nation and the various States will be sufficient to utilize all of the labor of all inmates. There will be no occasion then, they think, to farm out the labor of any inmate to any private firm, corporation, or individual, so that it may be assumed that the plan will open the door to none of the evils of forced labor which have from time to time awakened condemnation of those responsible and sympathy for the victims.

Germany Was "Deceived."

Captain VON MANTEY, a man hitherto concealed from long-distance observation and comment, though, since he is described as "of the German Admiralty," he must be of some importance in his own country, has made in a public address a curiously ingenuous confession. He told his hearers that the sinking of 600,000 tons of shipping monthly up to August, last year, was expected "to bring England to reason, but the determination of the English deceived us."

In other words, if the English had come up to the one true standard of reasonability, which of course is the German standard, the ravages of the U-boats would have shown them that further resistance was useless, and they would have given up the fight. In still other words, the Captain in effect admitted that the Germans would have acknowledged defeat if they had suffered such a loss as England did.

When one remembers what losses of life and property Germany has endured without surrender, it can be seen that there is something wrong with the Captain's argument, but the two deductions just stated are fair enough and they can hardly be avoided. At any rate, the Captain admitted for himself, and for the German Admiralty to whatever extent he is its spokesman, that he and it made a sad mistake with regard to the psychology of the British people, and that unrestricted submarine warfare did not achieve the purpose for which it was undertaken. But it had other effects most lamentable from the German point of view, including that of bringing the United States into the war.

In time, perhaps other Germans, in station both higher and lower than this naïve naval officer, will see that the whole policy of "frightfulness" was equally a mistake—that not one of its many variants had the result of bringing anybody to the expected state of docility. Instead, everywhere and always, the atrocities committed inspired a determination to resist to the death if need be. The nations that suffered most, Belgium and Serbia, are still very much in the war, fighting as hard as ever with the soldiers they have left, and doing it, too, with as much confidence in ultimate victory as any of their great allies.

Whether or not Germany can be scared into submission remains to be seen. The events of the past four years show that nobody else can be.

Again the "H" Is Complete.

It will take severer tests of the newly arranged "shuttle" between Times Square and the Grand Central Station than those that were given to it on Saturday and Sunday to prove whether or not it is going to work satisfactorily. There is no denying, however, that it met the traffic demands of those two days, and there is reason at least for hope that it will prove the long-delayed solution of a difficult problem.

New Yorkers are an adaptable lot, they are hardened to inconveniences in getting about their city, and experience has taught them not to have high expectations. They do what they are told, go where they are sent, and they do not resent exhortations to step lively while they are doing it. Giving them green and black lines to follow is something new, and a little queer, considering that most of us are illiterate and able to read printed directions, but that is a small matter, and the colors are intelligible after their meaning has once been fixed in mind.

At any rate, the shuttle is again in operation, after hope had almost died, and we did not have to wait till Oct. 6 for it, either. For the first time in subway history, so far as can be remembered, the fulfillment of a promise has come before the date announced for it. Thus a noble precedent has been established.

SEND WHITE BOOK OUT FOR WHITMAN

A Million Copies Ultimately to be Issued, Giving the Governor's Record.

APPEAL MADE TO VOTERS

Mandatory Appropriation and War Activities Among Causes Given for Increased Expenses.

Copies of Governor Whitman's White Book, which is the record of the Governor's two terms at Albany, were sent broadcast throughout the State yesterday by the Governor's campaign committee, otherwise known as the Whitman White Book Committee, with headquarters at 51 East Forty-second Street. Within the next fifteen days about 1,000,000 copies will be sent to the men and women voters. J. H. Sears is Chairman of the committee.

The volume contains forty-eight pages and is entitled Governor Whitman's Report to the Voters of the State of New York, 1913-16-17-18." The back cover bears a statement signed by the Governor and addressed "To all the people of the State of New York." After saying that the drive for the Fourth Liberty Loan will cover a period of three weeks which is usually devoted by partisan organizations to political campaigns in the State, the Governor says:

"I want to take this opportunity, not as a candidate, but as the Governor as well as a citizen of the State of New York, to urge all of our citizens to repeat the splendid achievements of the last three Liberty Loan drives and regardless of politics or partisanship to support the Government by purchasing Liberty bonds and War Savings Stamps."

The Governor's personal report to the voters comprises the first chapter in the book. A general review of his four years in office is followed by a list of his appointments, with sketches of the appointees, and this is followed by a discussion of financial policies and appropriations. Reports of the heads of the important State departments are taken up next. A notice on the front page says that because wartime conditions demand economy, only one copy of the book will be sent to each family.

In his personal report the Governor reminds the voters that two years ago, at the end of his first term of office, he gave a full report of the work done under his administration and was merely following along the same lines this year. So far as he knew, he said, it was the first time a Governor of this State ever made a report of his stewardship direct to the people. The Governor continues:

"I am now a candidate for re-election. I believe that the record, which I present to you herewith, entitles me to your support and justifies the continuance in office of my administration. If you disagree with me, vote against me. If you agree with me, I ask your vote that in your interest I may be enabled to continue the work in which this administration is now engaged."

The Governor after detailing the achievements of his administration in the way of wartime aid to the Federal Government disclaims any intention to claim partisan advantage for war work.

"There can be only one natural and proper course for the administration of the Empire State with respect to the prosecution of the war," he says. "There has not been, and there will not be, any partisan division. The men of our army on the western front and of our navy on the submarine infested coast of Europe are neither Democrats nor Republicans—they are Americans." The Governor continues:

"At the outset of the conflict I pledged and have since directed all the resources of this State to aid the nation in the vigorous prosecution of the war. Prompt and unqualified support of the President and of every branch and arm of Federal authority has been, and will continue to be, the primary motive for every administrative officer of this State until the victory is won."

In his financial statement the Governor gives the total appropriations during the four years of Democratic administrations, from 1911 to 1914, as $202,805,993.64, against aggregate appropriations during the four years of his administration of $284,388,829.46, an increase during his administration of $81,582,832.82. He says that this increase is attributable to four causes: First, mandatory costs of government; second, war activities; third, departmental and institutional development and growth, and, fourth, the added cost of each of the preceding groups necessary to meet wartime prices and conditions of living due to the war. He asserts that of the eighty-one million dollar increase during his four years, $40,806,003.07, or slightly more than 50 per cent. of the increase, was mandatory under the Constitution and the statutes, and for the mandatory increases in the support of the schools of the State; that $14,915,-990.09 was due to war activities, such as the equipment of the militia, the acquisition of land at Rockaway Beach for a Federal fort, and the promotion of agriculture; and that $25,840,839.66 was due to necessary departmental and institutional development and growth to take care of the State's increasing departmental business and the State's increasing institutional responsibility for the insane, for charitable wards of the State, and for prisoners.

SPENDS BIRTHDAY AT FRONT

Allied Troops Cheer Clemenceau, Now 78 Years Old.

PARIS, Sept. 29.—Premier Clemenceau, notwithstanding that Saturday was his seventy-eighth birthday, visited the front and conferred with Marshal Foch.

The allied soldiers along his route had heard that Sept. 28 was his anniversary and they cheered him as he went by.

Smith to Work Only for Loan.

Alfred E. Smith, Democratic candidate for Governor, from now until the end of the Liberty Loan drive will devote all his time speaking for the Fourth Loan. He leaves for Buffalo today, will speak before the Chamber of Commerce in that city tomorrow afternoon, and at two other meetings in Buffalo tomorrow night. He said yesterday that he did not know where he would go from Buffalo, but supposed he would be informed by the committee on Tuesday. He will return to this city next Saturday.

PUSH FOR PERSHING.

Keep the home push up for Pershing!
Get behind the boys in France!
Let them feel the mighty onrush
As the people seize the chance
To do something for their country—
Those who cannot go and fight
Send the word across the ocean,
"We are with you in our might!"

Take that coat from out the moth-balls,
And the suit from out the chest;
They will do another season—
Sacrifice like all the rest!
With the money that you're saving
Buy a bond or two, my friend;
Uncle Sam but wants to borrow—
He'll return it in the end.

Keep the home push up for Pershing!
Beat the Hun back o'er the Rhine!
We can help the foe to conquer,
With our dollars, yours and mine.
Buy a bond and push the Kaiser
Off the earth, and don't delay.
Keep the home push up for Pershing!
Buy a bond this very day!

FRANK DORRANCE HOPLEY.

OKUMA CAUTIONS MIKADO.

Gulf Between the Wealthy and the Workers Widening, He says.

TOKIO, Sept. 21, (Associated Press.)—Marquis Okuma has informed the Emperor that the war has brought a great change in the sentiments of the people because of the widening gulf between the wealthy classes and the masses. This had created a dangerous tendency, he said, which, if ignored, might undermine the social foundations of the empire. The power of the working class was asserting itself, he declared, and must be met.

Marquis Okuma recommended that Marquis Saionji was pre-eminently suited to bring national support to the Government. As a consequnce Marquis Saionji has been intrusted with the task of forming a Cabinet which, it is believed, will be based upon political parties.

TOKIO, Sept. 21, (Associated Press.)—The Marquis Saionji, who is looked upon as the successor to Premier Terauchi, is one of the strongest men in the empire. He virtually has the rank of Elder Statesman. The Marquis is a former President of the Seiyukai and retired from politics in 1914.

The designation of the Marquis as Premier is expected to have a soothing effect on the adherents of the plan to have the Government based on parties. The greatest problem of the new Cabinet will be to decide on Japan's attitude toward the reconstruction of the Russo-Austro-German front which is believed to be favored by Great Britain and France.

It is reported that Count Okuma has recommended Viscount Kato for the post of Foreign Minister in the new Cabinet.

DEFENDS TAX LIEN DEALS.

Cocks Asserts He Has Made Nothing from Nassau Purchases.

Ex-Congressman William W. Cocks of Westbury, L. I., whose name had been mentioned in the tax lien investigation started by the Mayor's Committee on Taxation, said last night that he would attend today's session of the inquiry before Magistrate Appleton in the Municipal Building, and would be prepared to assist in any way possible concerning the Nassau County tax sales. Mr. Cocks said he had been unfairly criticised because he had been one of the numerous purchasers at tax lien sales held in Nassau County.

"Some of these lots are worth less today than the prices at which they were sold twenty years ago," asserted Cocks. "Unpaid taxes in Nassau County, I am told, aggregate about $40,000. So far as I am concerned, I have not and do not want to make anything out of these sales. I have returned to a soldier, a G. A. R. man in the Bronx, a free and clear title to one parcel, pocketing the loss myself. I have also prepared the returns on other property. There is nothing to this criticism at all concerning me which is worth considering."

TO AID INFIRMARY FUND.

Prominent Men and Women in $200,000 Campaign.

An advisory committee, composed of leading men and women who will help in the campaign now in preparation to raise a fund of $200,000 for reopening the New York Infirmary for women and children, is being formed by the women physicians who will conduct the campaign. Among those who have accepted membership in this committee are: Mrs. George Gordon Battle, Mrs. August Belmont, Mrs. John Blair, Mrs. Harriot Stanton Blatch, Bishop Charles Sumner Burch, Mrs. Clarence Burns, Dr. Elisabeth M. Cushier, Dr. S. S. Goldwater, Mrs. William Jackson, Dr. Abraham Jacobi, Mrs. Philip M. Lydig, Dr. J. McNutt, and Mrs. Frederick Osborn.

Dr. S. Josephine Baker, director of the Health Department, Bureau of Child Hygiene, who has long been connected with the infirmary, is chairman of the Executive Committee which is in charge of the movement. Although the campaign probably will not be started for several weeks, voluntary subscriptions are already being received by the committee. Some of these are from poor women living on the lower East Side, where the infirmary's work is conducted, who are contributing their mites to show their gratitude for the free medical and other help they have received.

CALLS FOR WAR ON BULGARS

Prof. Hart Thinks United States Should Throw In Its Weight at Once.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Sept. 29.—Professor Aloert Bushnell Hart of Harvard believes that unless the present Balkan drive is a decisive allied success Germany will be able to start a strong eastern campaign in 1920. He thinks the United States should declare war on Bulgaria and Turkey at once.

"Unless Germany is defeated in the east now there will be a 1920 campaign," he said. "Allied victory in the west will not wholly defeat Germany. She is ready to give up Belgium, Northern France, Alsace-Lorraine even, to get peace now because she has her hands on really great spoils in the east. Unless we defeat Germany's plans for an eastern empire she will have won the war. And unless we do it now we shall have to do it in 1920 or later.

"When I say we I mean the Allies. I regret that I cannot say America, too. America has not declared war on Bulgaria and Turkey. America should do so at once. The Allies will attain the objects of their present drive if they press their advantage vigorously enough."

KAISER SEES A NAVAL SHOW.

He Watches His Submarines in a Theatrical Attack on a Convoy.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 29.—The Kaiser visited Kiel on Sept. 25, according to the Lokal-Anzeiger of Berlin, and witnessed manoeuvres in which submarines attacked a supposed convoy. He arrived at the German base early in the morning with his brother, Prince Henry, and Admiral Scheer.

After inspecting all types of submarines, the Kaiser boarded a vessel which proceeded to sea with other ships in the usual convoy formation. The convoy was surrounded by destroyers and other escort vessels, which the submarines attempted to attack. The Kaiser followed the manoeuvres with great interest. One of the escort ships and several of the vessels in the convoy were the victims of theoretical hits made by the U-boats.

The Kaiser talked to several U-boat commanders, and in an address to the officers thanked them for their co-operation and expressed confidence in further successful work by the submarines.

STATE PRISON HEAD RESIGNS

Carter Dissatisfied with Relations with Whitman, It Is Said.

Special to The New York Times.

OSSINING, N. Y., Sept. 29.—James M. Carter, appointed State Superintendent of Prisons by Governor Whitman in 1915 to succeed John B. Riley, who was removed after a long fight with Thomas Mott Osborne when Warden of Sing Sing, has sent his resignation to the Governor to take effect on Oct. 1, it was announced here today. Officials in Sing Sing Prison who have been close to Superintendent Carter said he was dissatisfied with the nature of his relations with the Governor and had decided to re-enter the banking business in Buffalo.

When Superintendent Carter took office he was Secretary of the Builders' Exchange in Buffalo and had had no experience in penology. It was explained that he was selected for the place because it was believed his experience as a contractor and his executive ability would be valuable in carrying out plans for the new cell house at Sing Sing and structures at other State prisons.

SAY HARRIS QUIT AS STATE CHAIRMAN

But Chairman Denies Statement Issued at Democratic Club.

KELLOGG MAY SUCCEED HIM

Retiring Leader Denies Contract Charges and Tells of Instructions to His Attorneys.

A statement, announcing the resignation of Edwin S. Harris as Chairman of the Democratic State Committee was given out at the National Democratic Club yesterday afternoon, but several hours later the following statement by him was sent out from Albany:

"I have not resigned, and I will not. I will be glad to call a meeting of the State Committee at any time, and that body may take any action it sees fit, but I positively will not resign. While I was in Syracuse last week I turned the management of the campaign over to Judge Kellogg of Glens Falls."

It was stated last night on good authority, after receipt of the Albany dispatch in which Mr. Harris denied that he had resigned, that friends of Alfred E. Smith had obtained from Mr. Harris a signed statement, now in their possession, to the effect that Mr. Harris would relinquish his place at the head of the Democratic State Committee.

The announcement made public in the name of Mr. Harris and was left by him personally at the office of the Democratic Club before he left for Albany, according to the clerk of the club. A telegram purporting to come from Mr. Harris was received at THE TIMES office early yesterday saying that such a statement would be made public at the Democratic Club.

The announcement here yesterday that Chairman Harris had resigned followed a conference with Alfred E. Smith, the Democratic nominee for Governor.

Just what occurred at the meeting between the Democratic candidate for Governor and Mr. Harris, whom newspaper articles recently published had charged with activity in trying to obtain war contracts for friends and political associates, is not known to anybody except the candidate and Mr. Harris himself. Up to the time he met Mr. Smith the Chairman had resisted pressure brought to bear upon him by friends of the former, who had urged him to retire to save the party and its candidates embarrassment in the coming campaign.

Mr. Harris, who had been at the Democratic Club during the day, was not visible to newspaper men who called there in the afternoon to obtain the formal statement announcing his retirement. This had been left at the desk. Here is the full text:

At Syracuse, Thursday, some of the Democratic leaders, expressing the utmost confidence in my integrity and saying that they did not believe any of the charges made against me to be true, said that they thought it would be politically expedient for me to retire. I told them that every inference and every charge against me was absolutely false, but that it was more important to me to dispose of those charges and correct whatever false impression they have created than to do anything else, and that as I must devote my time to this work I wished to be relieved from all connection with the campaign.

Late Thursday night I told Judge Kellogg that he must assume complete management of the campaign. Since returning to New York I have been more convinced than ever that I must do this, so I have notified Judge Kellogg that I have absolutely withdrawn. I hope the State Committee will meet at the earliest date to take action on the election of my successor.

E. S. H.

At the bottom of the typewritten statement of Mr. Harris, the following had been added in pencil:

I have directed my attorneys, Morris, Plinte & Saxe to proceed against The Globe, Monday or Tuesday I will give out a statement.

Alfred E. Smith made this statement after the Harris announcement had been made public:

"Inasmuch as Mr. Harris emphatically denies the charges made against him by The Globe, I am not in a position to pass upon them. He has removed himself from the campaign and desires to have some person elected Chairman of the State Committee in his place. From now on ex-Judge Kellogg will take full control of the Democratic campaign in this State."

It was learned last night that in all probability ex-Judge Joseph Augustus Kellogg of Glens Falls, Chairman of the Democratic Campaign Committee, would be elected Chairman of the State Committee to succeed Mr. Harris. George R. Van Namee, Secretary of the Democratic State Committee, will send out, probably today, a call for the committee to meet at Syracuse on Thursday to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Mr. Harris.

FIFTH AVENUE NOW 'AVENUE OF ALLIES'

World Famous Thoroughfare Transformed for Fourth Liberty Loan.

EACH BLOCK FOR A NATION

The "Avenue of the Allies," extending from Madison Square to Fifty-ninth Street, was the Mecca yesterday for thousands of persons, drawn there to view the gorgeous decorative effect of the myriads of flags of the allied nations suspended across the roadway and flung from the windows of business houses, and to marvel at the window displays and the paintings by many artists showing vividly the frightfulness of war and the patriotic urgency of buying Liberty bonds to the utmost. The spectacle has never been equaled in Fifth Avenue. It was a veritable flood of color, schemed so that each block represented one of the allied nations. It was impressive and inspiring.

The crowds first gathered at the Altar of Liberty for the Brazilian Day ceremonies. At the conclusion they turned north, and the avenue took on the appearance of an old-time Easter parade, except that it was more sober because of the sentiment of sorrow and vengeance the display aroused.

The merchants along Fifth Avenue have adhered to the plans of the Liberty Loan Committee to make each block strictly representative of a particular allied nation, and the scheme was readily comprehended.

Notable First Exhibit.

The crowds, for the most part, traversed the entire distance from 23d Street to 57th, and in each shop window found something to compel attention, besides the constantly changing flags, as they progressed from block to block. The first exhibit, beginning at 23d Street, is that of the United Cigar Stores in the Flatiron Building. On the roof of the one-story point of the triangular building is a sculpture of four soldiers in the attitude of rushing to battle and just behind them the Goddess of Liberty with outspreading wings and sword in hand and the motto: "Allies—United for Liberty." It was designed by Nelson Greene and made by Phillips Martin, the sculptor. In the window space is a display of aircraft and anti-aircraft guns and other instruments of war.

The Altar of Liberty, just off the sidewalk in Madison Square, across Fifth Avenue from the Flatiron Building, was crowded all the afternoon with persons eager not only to read the sentiments of the statesmen of the Allies, which appeared at the sides of the large map, but also to view the structure designed by Thomas Hastings, the architect, which within itself is impressive. On the left were brief quotations from utterances on the war by President Wilson, Lloyd George, Robert Lansing and Viscount Bryce, and on the right pointed expressions of Clemenceau, Viviani, and Asquith. Each utterance was read and reread by the thousands. Flags of all the Allies bedeck Madison Square around the Altar of Liberty.

In the great window of the Dennison Manufacturing Company, 220 Fifth Avenue, is an eagle, its broad wings overspreading figures of soldiers, and on either side, are masses of American flags. Across the avenue, at Brentano's, is one of the most forceful paintings expressive of allied will to victory. "Combined effort will win the war; be of that combined effort, buy a Liberty Bond," reads the inscription. The painting, which is by Lichtenauer, shows women pressing down victory across the sea, representing the navy, army, aviation, Red Cross, transportation, supplies, labor, agriculture, and thrift.

Submarine Denounced.

At two points the crime of the Huns in destroying defenseless fishing boats off the New England coast is brought to mind. In the window of James McCutcheon & Co., 345 Fifth Avenue, is a painting representing a fishing steamer on fire from submarine attack, with this caption: "Liberty Bonds Guarantee Safety for Our Fishermen." At Maillard's, at Thirty-sixth Street, the sinking of fishing boats off Cape Cod is shown in a picture by George Elmer Browne. It reveals a German submarine firing on a fishing boat, which is sinking, and the landing of survivors in open boats. The scene brings out the distress of the survivors and the hardships they have endured. "Stop This Piracy. Help Win the War. Buy Bonds. Buy to Your Utmost," is the inscription.

Aircraft and aircraft defense were featured in the windows of Best & Co. A painting in one of the windows by Gardner Symons showed a defenseless city under bombardment from the sky. The inscription read: "This is why we must carry on." In other windows were various instruments of warfare, including anti-aircraft shells, a German pineapple hand grenade, a German gas mask, a French gas beast, a French water bottle, a French grenade thrower, fuse end of a time shell, a German sabre, &c.

Several windows of Franklin Simon & Co. are devoted to a varied display. In one is a life-size statue of a soldier throwing a hand grenade. A painting of a mother in mourning, her face buried in her hands, with the words, "She gave, you lend," occupies the centre of another window. Another window display, labeled "Over the Top in France," shows soldiers and trenches and a placard reading, "A raiding party of American troops in No Man's Land. They sacrificed life and limb for democracy, what's your sacrifice? Invest today in the Fourth Liberty Loan." A fourth window contained a German submarine in miniature, the propeller revolving to give the impression of moving on the water. Hanging in the background is a painting of a boat and airplane, the inscription reading: "Help Bag These Sea Devils."

Across the way Bonwit Teller & Co. have a generous display of captured German rifles, and other German instruments of death, together with French shells, sabres, &c., and several expressive small paintings.

A Bliss-Leavett 21-inch torpedo in three sections is shown in a window of Lord & Taylor, where it was viewed with interest by nearly every person that passed along the avenue. The torpedo is 15 feet long, weighs 2,500 pounds, and cost $7,500. There is also shown in a window in this store the hundreds of badges, insignia, &c., that denote the rank of the different officers in all the various branches of our war service. One window is devoted to a scene in "No Man's Land at Night." A statue by Gutzon Borglum, entitled "Backing 'em Up," is featured, as is a display of letters from wounded soldiers, who said in their messages to America that they hoped to go back to the front to be with the bunch in Berlin, and expressed the hope that the Fourth Liberty Loan would be oversubscribed. What was generally said to be one of the best paintings shown was "Her Supreme Sacrifice," by Frank G. Valenti, a mother accompanying her son to a recruiting station to offer him to his country. Another window contains portraits of Wilson, Washington, and Lincoln.

See Artist at Work.

The throngs in the avenue were greatly interested in watching an artist paint a picture. Arthur Crips put on canvass in front of the Public Library a painting which typified Brazil and her place in the war as one of the allied nations. It was a part of the celebration of Brazilian Day—the second of the allied national days in connection with the Fourth Liberty Loan campaign.

Four paintings by Gordon shown in the window of C. T. Silver at 500 Fifth Avenue received much favorable comment from the thousands who saw them. They illustrated phases of the war. "Bonds Buy Bullets, Keep Our Guns Loaded," was the inscription above a painting in the window of Kaskel & Kaskel at 535 Fifth Avenue. The picture was that of a soldier with a gun leveled at the enemy while one hand held his ammunition belt. "The Vow," by Douglas Volk, based on President Wilson's utterances at Mount Vernon in July, aroused much interest. This was exhibited in the window of Andrew Alexander at 548.

The display of novel posters in the front windows of the Fifth Avenue Bank attracted wide attention. Under a picture on one poster appear these words of Washington: "Let us raise a standard to which the wise and honest may repair. The event is in the hands of God." In the foreground is the figure of Columbia about to raise our national emblem as she looks across the sea to where the "event" transpires. This picture is a photograph of the original painting by the celebrated artist Will H. Low, which is one of the thirty-two panels in the corridor and rotunda at the State Educational Building in Albany, and was presented by Mr. Low to the bank.

There is a most impressive picture in the window of L. P. Hollander & Co. at 550. It is a painting of a woman, who holds in one hand a Liberty bond and in the other a chain which represents Prussian bonds, with the words, "You Must Choose." The painting is by Augustus Vincent Tack. A picture at Youman's, Inc., at 581, by Francis C. Jones, shows a destitute and homeless family fleeing from the war zone, and the passer-by is commanded to "Stop This, Buy Liberty Bonds."

A striking picture, but one nevertheless that was considered to be just and accurate, was by Joseph H. Prostan, at Francis's, 589. This shows the Kaiser with an upturned sword in his right hand, a murdered woman lying prone on the ground to his right, while in his left hand he held an infant, from whose wounds blood flowed. Just behind the Kaiser stood a figure of the "Red Devil," and the inscription was "Buy Bonds and Beat Two of a Kind." A painting of "The Woman in Arms," by George Bellows, at Scott & Fowles, 590, shows the work of the Huns in cutting off the hands of their captives. At Dobbs & Co., 620, was shown another painting by Francis C. Jones. It was entitled "The Trail of the Hun," and showed a woman lying dead upon the floor of her home with dishes scattered and broken and her home plundered.

A painting by Franklin Booth at the store of E. M. Gattle & Co., 630, also received approval. It showed soldiers of the Allies at bay holding a number of Huns. The inscription read: "Help hurry these beasts to hell. We will not make peace with them." Underneath the painting appears the following: "These are portentous times. The beasts are at bay. Let none fail of his duty. We will not be defeated. Our blades shall yet taste the blood of the guilty. Our steel must be kept keen and the hands well sustained that wield it that they may be brought to an unconditional defeat. Lend all your money to this cause. Buy Liberty bonds now."

85,000 IN BAY STATE ILL WITH INFLUENZA

Health Commissioner Wires to Washington of Need of Physicians and Nurses.

DEATH LIST IS GROWING

Disease Reported as Increasing in Smaller Towns Near Boston— Western Massachusetts Little Affected.

BOSTON, Sept. 29.—At least 85,000 persons are ill from Spanish influenza in Massachusetts and the death list is growing hourly. Influenza and bronchopneumonia caused 149 deaths in this city in the twenty-four hours ended at 10 o'clock tonight, bringing the total death toll since the epidemic started on Sept. 14, up to 1,226 persons.

State Health Commissioner Kelley tonight telegraphed to Surgeon General Blue of the Public Health Service that the situation "continues serious."

Scores of physicians and nurses have been recruited for the fight against the disease, but Commissioner Kelley's message said there was still "a crying need for nurses and doctors, especially nurses." A health service train with five doctors and ten nurses arrived tonight. The message added: "Situation in a given city of ten changes from 'not alarming' to 'swamped' in forty-eight hours. Number of estimated new cases, inclusive of Boston, 30,000; deaths reported 250, probably incomplete."

Reports reaching the Health Commissioner show that Boston, Brockton, Gloucester, Chelsea, and Quincy are the worst sufferers among the larger cities. Many smaller towns, outside the metropolitan area, are becoming relatively as badly affected as the Boston district. Worcester is among the cities reporting an increasing number of cases, but is not yet in need of outside assistance. The western part of the State as yet has been but slightly affected.

Governor McCall, who has been in Canada for a few days, cancelled a visit to Halifax, N. S., and arrived home today to be in close touch with the situation.

A majority of the Protestant churches in the State were closed today, some being opened only for prayer. Masses were celebrated in Catholic churches in this archdiocese, except in communities where orders were issued closing all houses of worship.

As a means of stopping the spread of influenza and at the same time carrying out a policy decided on a few weeks ago the Trustees of the Boston Elevated Railway Company today ordered all smoking cars discontinued.

The Museum of Fine Arts and the reading room of the Boston Public Library were closed today for the duration of the epidemic.

SEES INFLUENZA CONTROLLED.

Copeland Believes Worst of Outbreak Here Is Over.

Health Commissioner Copeland said last night that he thought the epidemic of Spanish influenza was under control here. By that he did not mean, he said, that there would be no more cases reported, but that the worst was over. He was led to this belief, he said, by the fact that the estimated number of new cases for the twenty-four hours that ended yesterday morning was possibly under the number for the preceding day. It was necessary to estimate the number of new cases from the telephone reports. There were 225 cases reported by telephone, and allowing for the number that will be received by mail today, the Commissioner estimated that the total number would be about 250 cases as against 352 on Saturday. Of the cases reported yesterday fifty-six were taken from the quarantine station, having arrived on steamships. On Saturday sixteen cases were removed by the Quarantine authorities.

There were no deaths from influenza officially reported yesterday and but two from pneumonia known to have followed influenza.

"The urgent need just now is for nurses," Dr. Copeland said yesterday. "We wish to obtain extra nurses." Dr. Copeland urged that those who were qualified to serve the city should telephone to the Health Department in Centre Street some time today. Because of the shortage of nurses Dr. Copeland has asked the general hospitals to discontinue the practice of transferring influenza and pneumonia patients to city hospitals.

Dr. Copeland established examination rooms yesterday in the Grand Central and the Pennsylvania Railroad stations. A nurse and physician will be stationed at each station and all passengers who are ill on arrival will be taken to the examination rooms. If found to be suffering from influenza they will be removed to a hospital or put in charge of friends. SCIENTIST DROWNS AT LONG BEACH

BECAME ILL IN WAR WORK

Specialist in Fish Life Made Collections in South America for Natural History Museum.

The body of a well-dressed man of middle age, who was found drowned at the end of the seawalk at Long Beach early Saturday morning, was identified yesterday as that of Dr. Charles Rochester Eastman, well known among American scientists. According to friends, he had been suffering from overwork while a member of the War Trade Board in Washington.

Dr. Eastman had gone to Long Beach to get the benefit of the sea air a few days ago, when he suffered an attack of Spanish influenza. It is supposed that, following dinner on Friday night, he went for a walk along the boardwalk, and when he reached the end was seized with dizziness and fell into the sea.

Dr. Eastman was a naturalist of international reputation, a student of fish life, and had published upward of 100 scientific papers dealing especially with fossil fishes. From 1916 until he resigned to go into war work he was associate in palaeontology in the American Museum of Natural History.

Formerly professor in the Carnegie University at Pittsburgh, he was for many years a member of the teaching staff of Harvard University. He was a gifted linguist, and in his war work he is said to have translated no less than ten languages. He was well versed in classical Greek, and was said to have known more of the writings of the naturalists of antiquity than any living scholar.

He was a member of scientific associations and geological surveys in New York, Maryland, Connecticut, and New Jersey, and had travéled extensively. Recently he returned from a trip in South America, where he secured collections for the local Museum of Natural History.

Dr. Eastman was born in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, in 1868. He was graduated from Harvard University in 1890, from Johns Hopkins in 1892, and from Munich in 1894, receiving there his degree in medicine. He is survived by his widow, who is a daughter of Alvan Clark, the famous Boston maker of telescopes, and by one son, who is in the Aviation Training School at Harvard.

DEATH OF F. R. HALSEY.

Lawyer Made Collection of Prints Matched Only in France.

Frederick R. Halsey, an attorney and a well-known private collector of prints and engravings, died yesterday at his home, 521 Park Avenue. He was 73 years old. Mr. Halsey, who was born at Ithaca and was educated at Phillips Exeter Academy, Harvard University and Columbia Law School, had devoted many years to the collection of foreign and domestic prints and engravings and to the study of the art and the processes of production. His collection includes examples of the French portrait school of the seventeenth century and eighteenth century color-prints.

A friend of Mr. Halsey said last night that his collection was the largest and most complete of any private collection in the world, with the sole exception of a similar one in France. The cataloguing of his many thousands of items has now reached eleven volumes. His collection until recently was kept in the home formerly owned at 22 West Fifty-third Street.

Mr. Halsey was Adjutant General of the State during the Administration of Governor Flower. His funeral will be held at St. Thomas's Church at 10 o'clock tomorrow, and Mr. Halsey will be buried beside his wife, who was Miss Gertrude Keep, in the family plot at Watertown.

TEACHING MEN OF THE NAVY.

Y. M. C. A. Gives Opportunities for Advanced Study on Shipboard.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept. 29.—"Educational classes are rapidly being established on board ship and at all the naval stations in order to round out the education of naval men," declared Guy V. Aldrich, Director of Education of the Eastern Department of the War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A., at a conference of the Naval Educational Secretaries of the Eastern Department held here this afternoon.

Mr. Aldrich said most of the men in the navy had fair educations, but that classes had been formed to teach mathematics, navigation, geography, history, and French. He said that in many instances they had helped sailors increase their ratings. At the request of the Government, he said, the secretaries were giving a course in lectures on the war, the causes which led to it, the war aims of the United States and the Allies, &c.

WHITMAN OPENS LOAN DRIVE

Speaks and Reviews Liberty Parade in Jamaica.

Governor Whitman was the principal speaker at the rally in King Park which opened the Fourth Liberty Loan campaign in Jamaica yesterday. He also reviewed a parade, for which band music was provided after the Governor had protested against the bands being left out.

A parade of military and civic organizations was originally planned by the committee in charge, but when opposition to a Sunday parade was found to exist in some quarters it was decided to confine it to an escort to the Governor and omit the civil societies and the bands. When the Governor learned of this situation he said he wanted the bands, and the music was provided.

About 1,200 men were reviewed by the Governor, including 500 of the 151st Infantry from Camp Mills, 250 bluejackets, 400 police reserves from Jamaica, Richmond Hill, and Woodhaven, and veteran volunteer firemen now manning the firehouses in the Jamaica district.

Chairman Percy S. James of the Jamaica Loan Committee was in general charge, and Justice James C. Van Siclen presided. Prayer by the Rev. William D. Dye of Grace Episcopal Church opened the proceedings, and Judge Van Siclen introduced Governor Whitman.

"The price of victory is high," the Governor said. "The price of victory involves the sacrifice of human life. The price of victory is high, it is true, but the penalty of defeat will be greater. It is going to cost something to win this war, but it would cost infinitely more to lose it. We are not going to lose it. We cannot afford to lose it."

He said the boys on the other side were sustaining the proud record of the American soldier, and, referring to the sacrifices made by those who fought for the Union, said: "If we gave today in the proportion that our fathers and grandfathers did in the civil war, New York would be giving not 360,000 men but 1,100,000 men. If they had not sacrificed then we would not be in a position to fight now. If it had not been for the armies under Grant and Sherman and Sheridan there would be no army under Pershing now. If it had not been for the navy under Farragut and Porter then, there would be no navy now, and there would have been no army or navy or a people united under one President now if it had not been for Lincoln then.

"We pledge ourselves and everything that we have to our holy cause, and never was there in history a holier cause than that for which the Allies are conquering today. If we cannot give of our lives and physical strength, we can give of our means, and pledge our faith that the tyranny that has arisen in the Central Empires of Europe shall be overthrown."

Frederick C. Hicks, Congressman from the First District, made the next address, and told of what he had seen on his official trip to the fighting zone. At the conclusion of his speech he subscribed to a $1,000 bond. Others who made subscriptions were Judge Van Siclen and Chairman James.

MISS GOSS AND HALL VICTORS IN DOUBLES

KUMAGAE WINS EXHIBITION

Miss Eleanor Goss and Walter Merrill Hall yesterday won the New York State mixed doubles laurels at the New York Lawn Tennis Club by defeating Miss Margaret Grove and Harry J. Steinkampf, 6—4, 7—5 in the final match. With two teams of such experience and knowledge of mixed doubles engagements an exceptional contest was anticipated and a capacity crowd subwayed to the courts. The match lived up to precedents, as victors and vanquished played sparkling tennis at times and furnished many opportunites for applause.

For good measure the club committee put on an exhibition match after the mixed doubles had been decided, with Ichiya Kumagae, the Japanese leader of tennis, opposed to Hall. This contest, too, proved a delectable dish and was won by Kumagae in straight sets at 6—3, 9—7.

Miss Goss and Hall gave further proof of their doubles ability in disposing of Miss Grove and Steinkampf. Miss Goss was especially active and accurate in the first set, although she became a trifle wild under the bewilderment of the many lobs sent her way in the second set. Miss Grove played extremely well and it was mainly her excellent gets and lobbing that carried the second set to deuce and for a time threatened to break through the lead of Miss Goss and Hall.

Hall was not quite so severe as usual, but he placed well and never missed a chance for a kill at the net. Steinkampf was wild and had trouble getting his shots over the net, but he smashed well and kept his service shots so well mixed up that his opponents had little opportunity to place the ball on returns.

The superiority of Miss Goss and Hall was marked in the first set, when the ultimate winners ran out the set rapidly after being held in check for the early games. They continued in their rapid stride in the second set, getting a lead of 4—1 on games. At this point Miss Grove won on her service and began playing so well that the score rapidly was equalized at 4—all. Each won on service on the next two games, but in the final two games Miss Goss and Hall again took the upperhand and ran out the match.

There was to have been a semi-final match between Miss Grove and Steinkampf against Miss Marie Wagner and Elliot H. Binzen, to decide which team would play in the final, but Binzen was too ill to appear and he was defaulted. Some feeling was evident when it became known that Miss Wagner and Binzen were to be defaulted, but it was found impossible to postpone the decision in the mixed double longer.

The tournament has been hanging fire for two weeks, and Hall would have been unable to continue it further, as he is a Liberty Loan worker, and will give all of his time to the promotion of bond sales for the next month. The committee in charge of the tournament also failed to notify Miss Goss and Hall that the final was to be played, and it was only through the account in THE NEW YORK TIMES that Hall learned he was expected to appear.

Hall apparently was worrying about other matters than tennis when he started his exhibition match with Kumagae. In the first set Hall made innumerable errors on shots which brought little excuse for the bad playing. He did much better in the second set, when he came to the net more often and smothered the whipping drive of Kumagae.

The Japanese was enjoying fine command of his strokes, and came to the net more often than usual. He played with confidence, hit hard, and placed with uncanny accuracy. Many times Kumagae won placement aces with a drive which hit the line in the far corner of the backhand court.

SPEARS TAKES CYCLE DERBY

NEWARK, Sept. 29.—Bob Spears won the World's Cycling Derby at the Newark Velodrome here today from Frank Kramer and Alfred Grenda. It took four heats to decide the big race. Kramer won the first one. Spears took the second. The third race resulted in a dead heat. Grenda finished third in every one of these. Kramer and Spears then rode a special one-mile match race to decide the race, and Spears won.

Francisco Verri won two races, taking the five-mile open and the consolation of the Derby.

STOKELEY WINS ROAD RUN.

Titterton in Futile Chase of Winner in First Event.

William Stokeley of the St. Christopher Club won the first road race of the season yesterday, an invitation event held under the auspices of the Morningside A. C. of Harlem. The colored runner covered the course in 26:10 and had an advantage of about 200 yards on Frank Titterton of the Pastime A. C., who was second in 27:06.

Seven athletes started in the chase and all finished. Stokeley and Titterton made the running between themselves over the entire course of about four and a half miles, alternating in the pace setting until about half a mile from the finish, when Stokeley went away from the Pastime runner and won easily.

It was the first race held by the winged M club since moving to its new clubhouse. The course was from the clubhouse to Broadway, to 155th Street, to the viaduct, to Seventh Avenue, to 128th Street, to the clubhouse.

The order of finish follows:

W. Stokeley, St. Christopher Club, 26:10; F. Titterton, Pastime A. C., 27:06; F. Zabludofsky, Morningside A. C., 29:00; I. Lehman, Morningside A. C., 29:01; E. La Duc, Morningside A. C., 30:05; T. Ruffino, unattached, 31:05; N. Ralph, Morningside A. C., 31:45.

HELLUM INFLUENZA VICTIM.

Pentathlon Champion Critically Ill with Spreading Disease.

John Hellum, Metropolitan A. A. U. pentathlon champion while competing for the Pastime A. C., has been stricken with Spanish influenza, it became known yesterday. Hellum is at his home, where his condition is reported as critical. The Pastime A. C. athlete was one of the local team which competed in the national A. A. U. track and field championships at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station two weeks ago. He finished second to Avery Brundage in the all-around test.

BEST HORSES AT LAUREL.

Coming Meeting Promises to Produce High-Class Racing.

LAUREL, Md., Sept. 29.—The stage is set and the actors are properly decked at Laurel Park for the raising of the curtain Tuesday on what promises to be the best racing show ever offered in the neighborhood of Washington. The stage is as picturesque a track as may be found in the length and breadth of the land. The actors are the most brilliant thoroughbreds of the strongest and most representative racing establishments of the United States.

The Maryland State Fair Corporation, which always races through the month of October at Laurel Park, will furnish proper inspiration in the form of about as liberal a racing program as was ever offered by any racing association. Two hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars and more will be distributed among horsemen in the course of the twenty-seven days of racing that will begin on Tuesday. Of this sum $44,000 will be contributed to the twenty-two fixtures which closed in August and attracted upward of 1,000 nominations. More than $190,000 will be added in some 167 overnight races, not one of which will have a smaller value in added money than $1,000, and some forty or fifty of which will pay $1,200 and more.

On top of this, Colonel Matt Winn, the General Manager of the Maryland State Fair Corporation, offered $10,000 for a special race between two-year-olds which is designed to bring that astonishing gelding Billy Kelly and the brilliant Eternal together in a weight-for-age race at three-quarters of a mile. This race, which will be for from $5,000 to $10,000 a side, and a Red Cross benefit besides, is open to all two-year-olds. But, inasmuch as Dunboyne, the Futurity winner, is laid up with a splint, and Elfin Queen, the sensation of the earlier meetings, is in retirement, it is not likely that there will be more than two starters—Eternal and Billy Kelly.

There may be another match or so. There is talk of a mile special between Sun Briar, holder of the American record of 1:38 1-5, made in a race for one mile, and Roamer, holder of the American record of 1:34 4-5, made against time for the same distance. Willis Sharpe Kilmer, the owner of Sun Briar, is keen for such a race. Andrew Miller, the owner of Roamer, has not signified his attitude toward such a proposition, but he is a sportsman who, in the past, has never been known to sidestep a reasonable proposition.

Such horses as Sunny Slope, Johren, War Cloud, War Machine, Motor Cop, Flags, Eyelid, Lucullite, Exterminator, John J. Day, The Porter, Loechares, Weary Hegan, Omar Khayyam, Cudgel, Hand Grenade, Roamer, Borrow, Starmaster, Crimper, Midway, Boniface, Priscilla Mullens, Hauberk, L'Errant, Highland Lad, &c., will meet in the good distance specials for three-year-olds and over—the National, Baltimore, Washington, and Dixie handicaps.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Sept. 29.—The death of Lieutenant Homer Ingram, formerly a football player and oarsman at the Naval Academy, caused the absence during last week of his young brother, Midshipman William L. Ingram, captain of the Naval Academy football team for this season. An older brother is Lieut. Commander Jonas H. Ingram, and the three made up the best-known family of athletes which ever attended the Naval Academy. All three rowed on the crew and played on the football team when they were midshipmen.

PROS PLAY ERRATIC GOLF AT OAK RIDGE

Lead Changes Hands Many Times Before Kerrigan and Canausa Triumph.

In a match in which the lead alternated frequently, first one side and then the other led, Tom Kerrigan, now a seaman at the Pelham Bay Naval Station, and Fred Canauss of the home club defeated Tom McNamara and George Smith at the Oak Ridge Golf Club yesterday by 2 and 1. This four-ball event was for the Red Cross, and something like $700 was raised.

Eight of the eighteen holes, excluding the bye hole, were won and lost. Both Kerrigan and his partner were playing well, the first named taking 73 for the round and Canauss 75. McNamara, who is usually deadly in the short game, could not get going at first, and needed 41 for the first nine holes, but he shaved this by five strokes on the inward half, taking 77 for the round. Smith had an 80.

A good many of the holes were made in less than par figures, an instance being at the 147-yard fourth, which Smith won in 2. Par is 3, and Smith ran down a long putt practically from the green's edge. Again at the fifteenth, a par 5 hole, Kerrigan came to the rescue with a 4, which gave his side an advantage of 1 up. The match ended when this same player won the seventeenth also in 4.

The best-ball card follows:

The La Sultana soccer football team, the champions of the Metropolitan Association, played their initial game at Flushing yesterday and easily defeated the Queens eleven by 7 goals to 0.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 29.—Beris Kestich of Gary, Ind., Serbian chess master, clinched his title to the championship of the Western Chess Association by defeating J. S. Morrison of Toronto in the final round, thereby finishing with a total score of 9½ to 1½ without losing outright a single game. Morrison, at 7 to 4, tied for second place with Edward Lasker and H. Hahlbehm of Chicago and N. T. Harrison of Huntington, W. Va. There were five prizes. L. J. Isaacs, Chicago, and W. L. Moorman, Lynchburg, Va., followed with scores of 5½ to 5½.

LEADING GOLFERS TO PLAY.

Marston, Travers, Anderson, and Kirkby in St. Andrews Match.

The four leading amateur golfers of the Metropolitan district are to play in a four-ball match at the St. Andrews Golf Club next Saturday, in which it is expected that the Red Cross will benefit by several thousand dollars. Jerome D. Travers and Maxwell D. Marston will be paired against John G. Anderson and Oswald Kirkby in a contest at eighteen holes.

It will be one of the last events of the season at St. Andrews, and the club members are planning to make it a gala event. St. Andrews is the oldest golf organization in America, and its committee has appealed to the members to turn out in force to help make the occasion a success.

ALL EVEN IN FORTY HOLES.

Professionals Unable to Decide Match at Arcola.

Four professional golfers played forty holes at the Arcola Country Club yesterday and finished all even. Carl Anderson and A. W. Chiappa were opposed to Ferguson Cameron of North Fork and Claude Cameron of Arcola. Conditions called for thirty-six holes, at the end of which they were all even.

Nine extra holes were then agreed upon, but by the time the sixth green was reached they were still even, and darkness had descended, and it was decided to call it off until tomorrow.

Both sides had best balls of 72 in the morning and 73 in the afternoon.

ANDREWS GETS GOLF TITLE.

Alexander S. Andrews won the championship of the Flushing Country Club yesterday when he defeated F. B. Porter in the final. The match was at thirty-six holes, and was so evenly fought that they were all square after the two rounds were finished. On the thirty-seventh hole, which is par 4, Andrews scored a 3 by making a putt almost the entire distance across half the green.

DEAD HEAT FEATURE OF SPEEDWAY RACE

Trotting and pacing races were held on the Harlem Speedway yesterday after an absence of several months, when the Road Drivers Association of New York held the first matinée of its annual Fall meeting. Six events were run off, four for trotters and two for pacers. An encouraging crowd turned out to welcome back the sport.

A. Bruno's bay gelding, Bruno, carried off the blue in the best race of the day, the 1:09 trot, which went to four heats. This event produced the first dead heat on the uptown stretch in some time. The deadlocked trotters were E. Carpenter's brown mare, Bessie Baron, and Leo A., a brown gelding driven by J. A. Barrington. The horses flashed past the judges' stand as a team in the second heat, when Leo A., stepping to its utmost at the urging of Barrington, just managed to come on even terms with Bessie Baron at the finish.

Bruno had taken the premier place in the opening heat. In the third heat L. Albano's unsteady black gelding showed unexpected form, and, retaining a steady stride from the drop of the flag, led the field of trotters to the finish posts by about two lengths. In the fourth heat Bruno flashed past the judges' stand about three-quarters of a length ahead of Leo A.

J. H. Lawrence's J. W. D., a bay gelding which campaigned unsuccessfully on the Grand Circuit, defeated E. A. Meckel's Countess Kohl in a special free-for-all pace, which also produced interesting competition. J. W. D. showed the way in the second and third heats, while Countess Kohl led in the opening heat.

An Announcement About the Shortage of Clicquot Club GINGER ALE

BECAUSE of war-time necessity, our sugar supply has been greatly restricted. We are indeed glad that our soldiers and sailors, our people in their homes, and our allies abroad are going to have this sugar.

We are content to wait till it is reasonable that we should have the sugar we need to make Clicquot Club Ginger Ale.

A beverage can be sweetened with something besides sugar, but our scientists have not yet found a sugar substitute which we are willing to use in Clicquot Club Ginger Ale. The absolute purity of this product means so much that we prefer to have the rapid growth of our sales retarded temporarily rather than to permit Clicquot Club Ginger Ale to deteriorate in quality.

One of the things we are most anxious to do is to preserve without change the taste of Clicquot Club, which is exactly the taste a good ginger ale should have. Remember, whether you can get your whole supply or not, your grocer is doing the best he can for you, even if he cannot always get a full supply of your favorite brand.

The War Council of the American Red ss made public yesterday the fifth tatement of its statement on the use ing made of the National Red Cross ar Fund. It deals with the work of 14th Division of the organization, igh covers all parts of the world outle the Continental United States and war zones of Europe; namely, the tches in the American insular possions, the South American republics, West Indies, the Far East, and in er lands where the American Red oss is chapters or auxiliaries.

The statement says that when thirteen ndred were being organized in the ited States, at the beginning of the r, it was discovered that all the ericans who wished to take part in s work for humanity did not reside hin the geographical limits of the Reblic. Requests for membership began pour in from distant lands in every rt of the globe. These requests were insistent that it was determined to rease the number of divisions, and so Insular and Foreign Division, known the 14th Division, was organized No mber, 1917."

The 14th Division, although not a ar old, embraces nearly 150 chapters Charters. It began with eleven ee of them—those in Turkey, ersia—inactive. NO INCOME EXEMPTION.

Government Opposes Amendment Favoring Officers Abroad.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 29.—The Administration does not look with favor upon the amendment offered by members of the Senate Finance Committee to the pending $8,000,000,000 War Revenue bill under which Army, Navy, and Marine officers serving abroad would be exempted from the payment of income tax, while those serving in this country would have to pay. Under this amendment, General Pershing, for example, would be exempt, while General March, an officer of the same rank, serving as Chief of Staff in Washington, would have to pay.

The attitude of the Administration in opposition to the proposed legislation was disclosed in a letter made public tonight which the Secretary of the Navy, Josephus Daniels, has sent to Chairman Simmons of the Finance Committee. Secretary Daniels says that naval officers and the Navy Department are not asking for such an exemption, and that it is his judgment that the income tax should be paid by all alike, those in the naval and military service, as well as by civilians. If there is to be any exemption, he feels that it should include all officers, whether at home or abroad, pointing out that those officers who are serving at home are doing so not through choice but under orders from the Government.

The attitude of the War Department, it was learned tonight, is identical with that of the Navy Department in opposition to the proposed legislation.

DANIELS AT NAVY BENEFIT.

McCormack Gets $15,000 for Sailors, $25,000 for Liberty Bonds.

Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels attended a concert at the Hippodrome last night, at which John McCormack sang to raise funds for the Sailors' Comfort and Cheer League. The concert earned $15,600 for the sailors' Christmas cheer. Secretary Daniels, who came in after the intermission, sat in the right stage box, from which he spoke briefly.

"I can understand why the navy should be the most popular institution in the country," Mr. Daniels said. "There are 560,000 of the handsomest men in America in it."

During pauses in the performance many of the bluejackets approached the Secretary's box, and asked him to autograph their programs. One of the applicants was a wounded marine, and Mr. Daniels shook hands with him, and asked him to give his regards to the men in the hospital.

Mr. McCormack sang as usual on a crowded stage, following a pair of French opera airs, with four Irish folk songs, to which he added "The Last Rose of Summer." His last number, Fay Foster's "The Americans Come," was so much applauded that he sang a patriotic encore, "God Be With Our Boys Tonight." Winston Wilkinson, violinist, played "The Tambourine Chinois," by Kreisler.

Lieutenant Gordon Gibson, who won the Croix de Guerre fighting with the marines, spoke during intermission for the Liberty Loan. After telling of the fighting in France he said that Germany would be sure to take the offensive on the sea now that her men in the field were retreating. Mr. McCormack was one of the persons who subscribed for $25,000 worth of bonds.

Need Mechanics for Air Service.

Trade Test Board No. 2 yesterday sent out the following statement: "The Government is now calling for skilled mechanics between the ages of eighteen and forty-six in the following trades: Motor mechanics, instrument repairers, coppersmiths, carpenters, ignition repair men, propeller makers, blacksmiths, cabinet makers, fabric workers. Mechanics wishing to answer the call and enter the United States air service may apply to Lieutenant Bilker, ninth floor of 166 Broad Street, any day except Sunday, between the hours of 8:30 in the morning and 5 o'clock in the afternoon."

Novenas for St. Francis.

Novenas in honor of St. Francis of Assisi, whose feast comes on Friday, will be held every day this week, ending on Friday at the Church of St. Francis of Assisi, West Thirty-first Street, near Sixth Avenue, at St. Anthony's Church, Sullivan Street, near Bleecker, and in every Franciscan church throughout the world. In addition to the regular daily masses, devotions will be held each evening in the New York Franciscan churches. There will also be special sermons telling of the life and work of St. Francis.

SAYS SURFACE LINES NEED MORE MONEY

Commissioner Whitney Foresees Increased Fares, Higher Taxes, or Receiverships.

CHANGE MUST COME SOON

Suggests Public Ownership or Participation in Operation, with Share of Surplus Revenue.

In a statement which he issued yesterday Travis H. Whitney of the Public Service Commission discussed the surface railway transportation situation in this city. He expressed the opinion that the increased costs of operation must be met either from increased fares or from taxes. In his opinion a change must speedily come if the street service is to be even fairly adequate, and in his opinion it should be radical enough to give the city greater control of the lines. He offered this suggestion:

"The free grant of the right to charge an increased fare should have public consideration. There should be a surrender by the companies of at least some of their rights as private companies, that is, a greater participation by the public in the direct management of the properties and not merely regulation, with all the legal refinements and delays that may be thrown around an order that a company does not wish to obey.

"Such public participation may take the form of municipal ownership and either municipal operation or operation by lease from the city; or by Boards of Directors made up in part of men appointed by public authorities; or by payment to the city of a share of the amount of revenue arising from increased fares after necessary expenses are met, including increased wages necessary to procure adequate service, and with a joint board to administer the revenue."

Referring to the increased prices fixed by the Federal Government, which were willingly accepted by the general public, Mr. Whitney said:

"Why is the public unwilling that the increased cost of transportation shall be reflected in any increased fare just as has been done in case of the steam railroads? Perhaps the fundamental answer is that the public of this city has a vivid recollection of past exploitation of public franchises and will not consent to any action that indorses such exploitation or makes possible any future capitalization of public necessities. Yet this answer or explanation does not cure the present emergency. Government control over all matters relating to war requirements, Mr. Whitney said, met with general public approval, but added that "this enlargement of national powers has been facilitated by some local and State officials who have seen thereby an opportunity to escape responsibilities either embarrassing or unpopular locally."

After sketching the history of transportation in this city from the period of "free licenses, where owners were more interested in making money by securities than by operation," to the time when a curb was placed upon them by the creation of the Public Service Commissions, and the entry of the city itself into the transportation field with an investment of $200,000,000, Mr. Whitney said:

"This municipalization of rapid transit has produced stagnation in street railway development by private capital. As a result street railways, burdened with their own evils and with rapid transit competition, entered the war period with narrow margins of safety from a financial point of view. Yet to public authorities the problem is that transportation must be maintained, for it is the life, the circulation system of the city. Transportation can only be insured if the income is sufficient to meet the expenses of maintaining and operating the properties.

"Increased income can only come through increased fares or direct public participation in the costs of transportation. Little can be accomplished to reduce operating expenses. Improved service should be increased rather than reduced. Reserves are not available.

"The owners of utilities in this city no longer oppose municipal ownership. The city faces the dangerous possibility that under the pressure of war necessities the advocates of municipal ownership and the needy owners of utilities will unite to burden the city with utilities, good, bad and insolvent, useful and useless, under agreements that will gratify public officials by promoting their political success, and will bring the owners prices for which they will be duly grateful.

"This dangerous possibility should not stand in the way, however, of the city's acquiring upon sound terms surface lines that can properly be made integral parts of the city's rapid transit system, either to collect and distribute passengers in outlying districts to and from rapid transit terminals or in handling short-haul passengers in central districts by transfer."

TO HOLD GOLDEN WEDDING.

Aster Library Veteran Came Here with Wife from Denmark.

C. H. A. Bjeregaard, for years the librarian of the Aster Library, and Mrs. Bjeregaard will celebrate their golden wedding this afternoon at their home, 541 West 124th Street, with an informal reception, and at which all but one of their seven children and grandchildren are expected to be present. Mr. Bjeregaard, who is 74 years old, was born in Denmark, and served in the Danish Army, fighting against the Prussians in 1864.

Later he served two years in the Danish diplomatic service in Russia, and came to this country in 1873, becoming a citizen soon afterward. Mrs. Bjeregaard accompanied her husband to this country. They were married in Denmark fifty years ago today.

Since the late seventies Mr. Bjeregaard has been a well-known figure in the Astor Library, now a part of the Public Library of New York. He has also written "The Inner Life of the Tao-Teh King," "Mysticism and Nature Worship," and a translation of Omar Khayyam.

It stirs every American heart

WHO was not thrilled to read of the American soldier who supported a wounded comrade, and fought his way with the little detachment back through the Boches to the American Lines?

That is only one deed of heroism among the many happening every day and looked on as a matter of course by the boys fighting for us over there. It shows the stuff that's in them.

They are our own sons and brothers. Is the same stuff in us over here?

We have the opportunity at home to show our patriotism by other deeds of valor. We can fight and we MUST fight. And we must Win, no matter how heavy our burdens may be.

Our former habits are the Huns we've got to battle with. We can't go on living as we used to. We can't go on spending our money for things we like. We must set up new standards—war standards—and stick to them—loyally.

From now on there can be only one standard for those of us who fight behind the lines—and that is their standard.

We must buy bonds to our utmost

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

Providing the Sinews of Victory.

We are seeing such wonderful performance of the promise given to the world when the Allies decided upon a unified military command that no man can say, with the certainty that he is within six months of the time, when the war will be brought to its end. The Allies could have peace now, and on terms that would superficially recognize them as the victors, but not on terms that would offer any guarantee against a recurrence of war. Germany knows the doom that is written for her; Austria has sought to escape her punishment by substituting diplomacy for her broken military machine, yet the Allies are not ready to think peace, much less to discuss it with an enemy whose solemn promise would be meaningless. President Wilson has said that we cannot come to terms with Germany, and with such plain notice of the futility of overtures the enemy may be expected to continue the fight in the hope of obtaining a better position in the final settlement through reliance upon force than they would obtain by confessing defeat now that the tide of war has definitely set against them. The length of the war depends upon the ability of the people of the Central Powers to stand punishment. An officer of high rank in this Government, after enjoying rare opportunities for discussing the situation with European leaders and observing the work that is being done in France, came to the conclusion that Germany will be impotent by July 1 next. That was a guess, which will not be allowed a place in the speaker's program for pushing the war to the point where Germany will not be able to say what terms she is prepared to accept. Every one is entitled to his own opinion as to when the struggle will be brought to a stop, but no one has a right to relax his efforts to make the victory absolute, no matter how long delayed.

There is a peace market on now, but it is not the kind of a peace market for which traders looked during the first years of the war. The top of the hill has been reached and the manner in which war will be ended, if not the time, is plain. The readjustment of prices to fit investors' ideas of the values of stocks and bonds as they will be during the reconstruction of Europe has been under way for some time. It will be accelerated as guide posts come into sight indicating the end of the period of heavy Governmental borrowing and the relaxation of efforts to increase tax revenues. At the moment a sudden collapse of the enemy seems improbable; like a disease which must run its prescribed course the war promises to burn itself out slowly. It is the habit of the speculator to discount tendencies as he observes them, but the process has been retarded this season by the difficulties he has encountered in handling his market commitments. The rise in prices of most issues, and the decline in others, encouraged by the view that we are in the last year of the war, has been gradual and accompanied by none of the frenzied trading which would have been looked for in a market not subject to the insistent considerations of a limited supply of money. With a continuance of such control—and it seems unavoidable that the work of the Banking Committee should be kept up while the Government is controlling new security issues in the interest of war financing—the entire process of readjusting price levels to keep pace with the progress toward victory may be completed without a broad, speculative market. Boom markets, only to a less degree than depressions, bring in their wake unhappy consequences which may be escaped if the Stock Exchange goes on performing day by day the work of preparing business for the new conditions it will have to face.

The banking community has succeeded almost completely in divorcing Government loan operations from considerations which financiers have become educated to applying as a test for all new security offerings. Looked at from a practical standpoint an measured against the position of earlier Liberty Loans the Treasury Department is not justified in asking the nation to supply $6,000,000,000 more in one operation at 4¼ per cent. Yet it may be said without vainglorious boasting that the full amount of the loan will be subscribed. The immediate response of small districts, which made sure of enough subscriptions through advance work to enable them to announce, simultaneously with the opening of the Fourth Campaign, their full allotments taken is an omen of the spirit which the workers the country over will show. When Secretary McAdoo replied to a request for a summary of the arguments which might be used for getting in subscriptions to this offering, he responded "Pershing and the boys in France." That is precisely the reason which will make the loan go over. The war has become our religion; nothing else matters much while American blood is being poured out on the torn fields of Europe. If the Government had made the new loan more attractive to meet the current rate for funds it would have done as the British have done, but it would have lost a part of the great moral lesson which the nation is assimilating. It is not unfair to ask a citizen who is still enjoying the privileges of security and prosperity to make the extremely small sacrifice involved in the purchase of bonds on terms less advantageous in point of interest yield than he could obtain by exercising his freedom of choice. It is no longer necessary to talk to possible investors of the fundamental value of an obligation of the United States. The war has finally been "sold" to the people of this country by their sons and brothers, who are prosecuting it, and it is a privilege no less than a duty to subscribe to this loan and succeeding issues to the full extent of one's financial ability.

To be the success that it should be this Fourth Loan must obtain a much wider distribution than any of its predecessors. There is manifest among the men immediately responsible for its flotation doubt as to the ability of many big corporations, which rolled up the total for the other offerings by subscriptions running to from one to fifty millions, to accept their pro-rata share of the new loan. Most of them will do well if they match their purchases in the past, for they must coincidentally prepare for a 100 per cent. increase in taxes on surplus earnings. There is a very large class of individuals which could double and then double again their subscriptions made to the last offering of 4¼s. The tax exemptions permitted under the amendment, allowing the purchaser of $30,000 of the Fourth Loan to gain exemption from surtaxes not only on the coupons from those, but from a total of $50,000 of previous issues in addition, make the 4¼s far superior in point of net return to anything else in the list of high-class bonds to investors subject to big surtax payments. This feature is the essential advantage which the bonds now being sold have over the previous issues, and it should result in placing a tremendous total with the class, which Mr. McAdoo believes has been derelict in buying to the limit heretofore.

INTEREST RATES ON RAILWAY DEPOSITS

Banks to Pay 2 and 3 Per Cent., McAdoo Rules—Expected to Stabilize Money Market.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 29.—William G. McAdoo, Director General of Railroads, today announced fixed rates of interest to be paid by banks on all funds of the Railroad Administration which they hold. The rate will be 2 per cent. per annum on moneys payable by check on demand, and 3 per cent. on deposits payable after thirty days' notice. Interest rates on railroad deposits have varied from 2 to 6 per cent.

Mr. McAdoo made this formal announcement:

CIRCULAR NO. 5.

All banks and trust companies in which funds of the United States Railroad Administration or of the various Federal treasurers are deposited will be notified that in future they will be required to pay interest at the following rates:

On deposits payable by check on demand, 2 per cent per annum.

On time deposits payable after thirty days from date or after thirty days' notice, 3 per cent. per annum.

These rates will apply to all railroad deposits in all banks, except in special cases where, because of the smallness of the account or the particularly fluctuating character of the balance, it may be considered proper not to require the payment of interest.

An investigation recently made shows that the rates of interest allowed by banks which pay interest on railroad deposits has ranged all the way from 2 per cent. to 5 per cent. per annum, and the higher rates paid have been used by some banks as an excuse for excessive rates charged to customers.

The Director General expects banks designated as railroad depositaries to observe faithfully the interest laws of their respect States and not to charge rates of interest in excess of those permitted by law.

It is of great importance to the public welfare to the financing of the war, and to the commerce of the nation that interest rates throughout the country shall be kept at a moderate level or within a reasonable range.

W. G. McADOO.

The fixed rate makes it impossible for banks to compete for railroad deposits by bidding up the interest. This, it is felt, will have a very important effect upon the money situation.

FORECAST LOAN'S SUCCESS.

Bank Sees Country Awakened to Its Responsibility in the War.

The Mechanics & Metals National Bank says in its October letter that an important factor pointing the way toward the successful flotation of the Fourth Liberty Loan is the full appreciation on the part of the American people of the serious part the United States is taking in the war.

"At the time of the First Liberty Loan, in June, 1917, the letter adds, "the United States was not even ankle-deep in the war. Today it is waist deep, and to maintain its part with the other allies a supreme effort confronts the American people. Our war costs are running beyond $60,000,000 daily, which is an amount greater than any other nation in the world ever spent or contemplated spending for war. Great Britain's greatest daily cost has been under $45,000,000; Germany's greatest daily cost has been $40,000,000. Ours is a big way of doing things—it is the winning way—and there is no question as to the result.

"There is no misgiving in any heart that the American people, who responded so remarkably to previous Liberty Loans, will do anything different on this occasion. Looking at the proposition in its financial aspect, it is a worthy task that confronts the people, that of subscribing the fourth time within a period of fifteen months to a record-breaking war loan and at the same time preparing to meet new and very severe demands upon their surplus made by the new tax bill. The war revenue legislation being considered at the moment by Congress will not be concluded until the close of the Liberty Loan campaign, but it will nevertheless have considerable bearing on the loan inasmuch as it very directly affects those investors and business men to whom the Treasury Department must look for a large part of the expected subscriptions."

In discussing the war situation, the bank says the Kaiser and his spokesmen have recently in their statements manifested an acute apprehension over the outlook.

"Behind the military front, where the German people have stood firmly up to this time, we recognize that a change has occurred," the letter states. "A stir is going on among the people that is portentous. Of course, we have no way of telling how firm Germany's economic structure still is. In the past it had more substance than we supposed. Today it may still have substance, or it may be no more than a house of cards. We are being constantly warned that we are not arrayed in any belief that the military power over the Central Empires is broken, or that the people are on the verge of starvation and revolution.

"But if we are not thus warranted, we nevertheless have every reason to place our trust in things that signify German weakness. One of them is that, completely robbed of all military successes on the western front, Germany's war machine is no longer capable of gaining victory over the allied troops. Another is that Germany is on short rations. Still another is that Germany's man power is seriously diminished. And another is that German's finances are nearly undermined. We have every reason to believe that, cut off from trade with the civilized world, Germany is in a process of economic strangulation.

"Intelligent people, believing this, are aware that they may not yet be warranted in the conclusion that Germany is facing complete defeat. But they are ready to attribute to the rapid dwindling of Germany's strength—in a military and economic sense—the motive of Germany's desire for a speedy and negotiated peace, and, recognizing this motive, they are one in urging that the war activities of the Allies be redoubled."

Watchers Report Strict Observance of Gasless Sunday Rule.

Outside of the appearance of automobiles that were legitimately engaged in Liberty Loan work, New York showed no weakening yesterday in its determination to observe the gasless Sunday rule to the letter. Between the early hours and 11 o'clock in the morning no pleasure cars of any kind were observed on Broadway, Fifth and Sixth Avenues, south of Forty-second Street. The Sunday quiet which pervaded most of the thoroughfares was broken only by an occasional express wagon or an army, navy, or Liberty Loan car.

The Brooklyn and Manhattan Bridges during the same period were also deserted as far as tourist or any other pleasure cars were concerned. Not one automobile other than army and navy machines was seen to pass over these bridges.

Traffic patrolmen stationed at the Manhattan end of the Queensboro Bridge, Fifty-ninth Street and Second Avenue, said that up to an early hour yesterday afternoon they had seen fewer automobiles cross the bridge than on any Sunday since the gasless rule went into effect. Most of the cars which did pass were funeral coaches.

No violations of the conservation order were reported by the police in the Bronx up to 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Only forty automobiles were seen on the Grand Concourse, Boston Road, and Pelham Parkway in the entire day. For the most part these cars were in charge of army and navy officers. Fifteen of them were funeral corteges.

ZONE SYSTEM FOR BUILDING LABOR

Consternation Follows Rulings on Washington Orders by Advisory Boards.

ONE INDUSTRY TOTTERING

$7,000,000 Quota Set Aside for Loan Subscriptions by Builders.

Consternation in building and realty centres along the Atlantic seaboard following intimations by newly appointed supervisionary bureaus to inquiring architects and builders that practically all non-war building and realty improvement work would cease for the period of the war found expression in half a dozen ways in the country's building trades last week.

One of the most important industries concerned with the manufacture of an essential basic building commodity was so close to the necessity of closing down all plants in this section of the country and of retaining only one small group for the duration of the war that it sent a delegation to Washington to ascertain officially just what it had to expect before taking such drastic action.

Another important industry concerned with the manufacture of a still more vital building commodity, also used largely in war work, held a conference of Presidents of various companies to ascertain the outlook as regards manufacturing conditions in the immediate future.

A conference was held at the Building Trades Employers Association to learn what was best to do under the circumstances, and it was decided that it would show its patriotism, despite the hardships imposed upon it by war bureaus, by pledging at least $7,000,000 in Fourth Liberty Loan subscriptions. In the meantime, work was started, through overtures to Mayor Hylan, Congressman George W. Loft, and John A. McCarthy, to have appointed to the sub-committee on non-war construction permits practical building men. A case was cited where a building suffering fire damage was not permitted to be shored to protect it from entire collapse, although it was stated that the necessity of this work was urged by the Fire Department.

Advices received Saturday from Washington intimated that something would be forthcoming from the capital before long indicating that a zone system for labor would be established, for distribution of man power not employed directly in war munition manufacture when the peak of the Government's war construction program had been reached, which, it was said, would probably not be longer than three to six months. In such event an important step forward in solving the labor problem will have been made, according to building interests.

At the same time assurances were given that modification of rules concerning building construction of an essential character might be considered "within the very near future" as the result of revelations of the quantity of building construction work of a reasonably essential character that has been held back because of the necessity of permitting even more important construction work to proceed.

It was shown that in New York City alone there is at least $94,000,000 worth of essential building work ready to be submitted to the Mayor's Committee for permission to proceed, and about $115,000,000 additional being held back by architects that have not reached the stage for estimates when the war stringency prompted owners to defer work. None of this work represents "speculative" building, but actual building work that would place in a short time available rental space for business and war workers.

It is shown that the lack of rentable space is so acute in New York that the Government, after ordering the commandeering of certain loft buildings, had officially to rescind the orders because the tenants simply could not find adaptable space elsewhere, and it would have meant practical Government confiscation to have dispossessed them.

Washington was considerably surprised at the volume of protest that was registered there as to the terms imposed upon building interests by "Circular No. 21," addressed to all manufacturers, distributers, and dealers of building materials, making them responsible for the ultimate uses to which all materials sold by them were put. It was said that no conception existed as to the extremely acute situation prevailing with relation to building material manufacture and distribution in the large metropolitan districts of the East.

In many cases the pledges were signed through fear of being considered unpatriotic, but it meant in many cases almost total cessation of business because the manufacturers placed the full burden of responsibility upon the dealer, who did not have the means of scrutinizing every job and who, therefore, actually was forced to refuse business. In consequence most of the building material distributers of New York are working upon the narrowest percentage of activity and some have already dangerously approached the vanishing point.

Canada, which has been in the war two years longer than the United States, has been showing a gain in building construction over last year. The Financial Chronicle reports from twenty-seven cities in the eastern provinces an outlay of $3,035,530 for August as against $2,856,560 last year. Thirty-nine cities in the Dominion show $4,874,113 for August as against $3,426,142 in August, 1917. For the eight months of this year the building expenditures outside of war work in Canada now $27,893,919 as against $24,033,759 for the same period last year.

The war in Canada is no nearer an end than it is here, and yet building construction for this country is $528,228,975 comparing with $536,296,035 in 1917 compared with 700 millions in 1916 and a normal building year of $1,500,000,000. In New York eight months of wartime restriction has brought the total from $176,606 in 1916 to $44,527,000 in the first eight months of this year, whereas in the same eight months last year the total for five boroughs was $78,345,674. Canada is forced to let building construction go ahead, although its war burden is proportionately heavier than that of the United States.

This country is facing the situation in a still more acute form because Canada is only 39 per cent. underconstructed, while the United States was 46 per cent. underconstructed in July and New York at that time 33 per cent.

In view of the uncertainty of construction regulation all building material prices on Saturday, according to the Dow Service Daily Building Reports, were made subject to correction.

The campaign for clothing for the destitute French and Belgians under the auspices of the American Red Cross will have its formal opening today. REAL SHUTTLE TEST TODAY.

Pressure of Normal Traffic Expected to Prove It a Success.

Subway passengers had no difficulty yesterday with the newly opened shuttle connection between Grand Central and Times Square. As on Saturday the green and black bands directed passengers to trains and prevented confusion, though the rather long walk from Grand Central Station to the shuttle platform caused some grumbling.

Officials look for the real test, however, today, when there will be opportunity to observe the working of the shuttle under pressure of normal traffic. Three-minute headway is provided for in the schedule for the three-car shuttle trains, but if traffic requires it the shuttles will be increased to six cars, and the headway minimized.

Parkhurst Church a Social Centre.

Work of remodeling the edifice of the old Madison Square Presbyterian Church at Madison Avenue and Twenty-fourth Street for use as a social centre for employes has been begun by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, owners of the structure since the church was consolidated with the University Place Presbyterian Church and the Old First Presbyterian Church at Fifth Avenue and Twelfth Street.

The Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst was pastor of the church for many years until it was consolidated with the other churches.

Crowder Notifies Draft Boards That He Depends on Them to See That Men Are Ready.

LOTTERY PLANS ARE LAID

President Likely to Draw First Number in Event Which Begins at Noon Today.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 29.—Plans were completed today for the lottery to be held in the Senate Office Building at noon tomorrow to determine the order in which the 13,000,000 registrants under the new selective service legislation will be called into the service of the country.

There was no formal announcement as to who would draw the first number, but the report was still in circulation that President Wilson would attend the drawing, and this was not officially denied. It is estimated that the drawing will occupy twenty-six hours.

While only 100 of the numbers drawn will be carried on the press association and newspaper telegraph wires tomorrow, General Crowder hopes that all master lists will be completed within two days and sent out by mail to the district boards. They will be released at once in the various districts covered by the boards, and newspapers will be requested to publish them. Copies also will be posted and registrants are requested to determine their order in the drawing as soon as possible.

It is possible that some of the registrants in the age groups announced by the President—youths of 19 and 20 years and men between the ages of 32 and 36, inclusive—will be called out for active service as early as Oct. 15. The War Department, it is understood, believes that practically all of the men in Class 1 will be in the service by Jan. 1.

In requesting district boards to make all haste in the classification of the registrants, General Crowder said today that the military program required that all of the Class 1 men be made available for military training within ninety days, and that some would be needed almost immediately.

Crowder to District Boards.

"A heavy task faces the district boards in connection with the classification of the men who registered on Sept. 12," General Crowder wrote in a message to the members of the district boards.

"It is with a full realization of this burden and responsibility that I rely upon you to assist us in the work of expediting the classification to the fullest possible extent consistent with the great importance of the task.

"As you are aware, the district boards in dependency cases are, generally speaking, the courts of last resort. In occupational cases the original responsibility is yours. In the latter field your jurisdiction has been extended by the recent acts of Congress, extending the age limits of the selective service, to cover deferment of persons engaged in all occupations or employments as well as in industries, including agriculture, which you may find to be necessary to the maintenance of the military establishment, or the effective operation of the military forces, or the maintenance of the national interest in the emergency. Thus, at a time when the exigencies of the military situation make it imperative to speed up the entire machinery of the selective service, the number of cases which you will be called upon to handle is likely to be largely increased.

"These cases you must handle under the double obligation of satisfying the vital man power needs of the army, but not impairing the economic structure of the country, the efficiency of whose functions, in many instances, is vital to the support of the army. As to your ability to solve this problem to the best interests of the nation and the cause for which it fights, I have not the slightest doubt. It is to the necessity for the prompt handling of all cases as they come before you that I desire particularly to direct your attention.

"Until the classification of the new registrants has been completed there will, of course, exist considerable and widespread uncertainty and unrest among the registrants, which, in the case of those employed in necessary occupations will tend to retard production. Thus the national interest demands that there be no unnecessary delays in determining the status of these individuals.

"On the other hand, the military program requires that Class 1 men under the new registration be made available for military training within ninety days—some almost immediately.

"It is upon my faith in your ability to meet the situation that I have built my pledge to have the men ready when called for."

Copies of the regulations giving complete details concerning the procedure to be followed in calling out men were issued today to the newspapers.

Listing and Calling of Men.

The following extracts from the regulations contain information of direct interest to registrants:

"Section 4. The method of determining the order to be followed by each local board in calling for military service the persons in the class of September, 1918, whose registration cards are in its possession and have been given 'serial numbers' in accordance with sections 45 and 46, 'Registration Regulations No. 3,' on or before the 21st day of September, 1918, is:

"A list of the names of the persons in the class of September, 1918, whose registration cards are in its possession and have been so serially numbered, shall be made by each local board.

"The first name to be entered on the list prepared by each local board shall be the name of the person in the class of September, 1918, the 'serial number' of whose registration card is first placed in such schedule containing the numbers from 1 to 17,000, both inclusive, reading down from the top of the first column of the first page of the schedule, disregarding the numbers in the schedule which do not appear on any registration card so serially numbered, and in the possession of the local board.

"Before the name of the first person on each list shall be written the 'serial number' of his registration card.

"The order number, that is, the 'number' designating the order in which he is liable to be called for military service, to be written on the list made by each local board after the name of such first person on each list, is number one (1).

"The next name to be entered on the list prepared by each local board shall be the name of the person in the class of September, 1918, whose 'serial number' is next placed in such schedule containing the numbers from 1 to 17,000, reading down the columns from the top thereof, disregarding the numbers in the schedule which do not appear on any registration card so serially numbered, and in the possession of the local board. The order number to be written on the list made by each local board after the name of such person on each list is number two (2).

"The order in which the names of all such persons in the class of September, 1918, shall be entered on the list prepared by each local board shall be determined in the exact manner above described for determining the names of the first and second persons on each such list, and this method shall be pursued by each local board until the name of every person whose registration card is in its possession and has been given a 'serial number,' in accordance with Sections 45 and 46, Registration Regulations No. 3, on or before the 21st day of September, 1918, shall have been entered upon the list.

"Section 6.—Immediately after the order in which the persons in the class of September, 1918, whose registration cards are in the possession of each local board, is liable to be called for military service shall have been determined by such local board, in accordance with Section 4 of these regulations, the list (Form 102) shall be posted in the office of the local board in a place accessible to the public view. Such list shall contain the names, residences, and race of such persons in the order prescribed by Section 4 hereof, and shall have the 'serial number' of the registration card of each such person before his name, and the 'number' designating the order in which he is liable to be called for military service after his name.

"As promptly as practicable thereafter a complete copy of such list shall be made accessible in the office of the respective local boards to the press, with a request for publication, and one copy of such list shall be mailed by each local board to the Adjutant General and one to the Provost Marshal General in Washington.

"Such list should be, if practicable, completed, posted, made accessible to the press, and mailed as above required within two days after the determination by each local board of the order of liability of the persons within its jurisdiction to be called for military service.

"Each such list must contain the names of all persons in the class of September, 1918, whose registration cards are in the possession of the respective local board and have been given 'serial numbers' in accordance with Sections 45 and 46, 'Registration Regulations No. 3,' on or before the 21st day of September, 1918, and whose names have been copied upon the lists and supplemental lists required by Section 49 of 'Registration Regulations No. 3' on or before the 21st day of September, 1918.

"Section 9.—In furnishing the allotment required under any general call for men physically qualified for general military service, or under any general call for men physically qualified for special or limited military service, each local board, in accordance with instructions received from the Governor, acting for and by direction of the President, shall call registrants in accordance with their order numbers within their respective classes as shown by the classification and within the ages from time to time prescribed by the President as immediately liable to be called for classification and for military service, and shall otherwise observe the procedure specified in Section 159 F of the Selective Service regulations, (second edition.)"

ALL GERMAN LINE FACING DISASTER

Washington Sees Growing Possibility of Collapse Under Increasing Pressure.

PERSHING DRIVE IMPORTANT

May Force Enemy Back to Belgian Border—Retreating Troops in Danger of Rout.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 29.—Continued and increasing pressure by Marshal Foch along virtually the whole western front from Verdun to the North Sea has brought the Germans face to face with a critical situation, in the opinion of observers here. With the enemy main defense position, the Hindenburg line, shattered in several places; his secondary line to the east, the Kreimhilde position, punctured, and his own official reports admitting withdrawals on all fronts, there is a growing possibility, it is thought, of a serious disaster.

French troops are over the Chemindes-Dames barrier on a wide front, and as they now are pressing on the flank of the retreating Germans to the south and west, the situation in the centre of the great German defensive arch appeared to observers as most critical. The collapse of the whole Laon bastion, on which the vast Hindenburg line hangs for support, was believed to be foreshadowed.

Further north, British, Belgian, and American troops are smashing through interwoven trench systems and across canals and other naturally strong positions at a rate that shows the desperate straits of the enemy to find men to meet the drive. No help for Laon can be looked for from that direction.

Kreimhilde Line Broken.

To the west, General Pershing's First Army apparently has broken the new Kreimhilde line with the capture of Romagne. The Hindenburg position is already behind the Americans on their whole front, and to their left the French also have swept over the enemy defenses on a wide sector.

An examination of the map tonight showed that the Hindenburg line had been smashed, at the fewest, in six different places. There seemed no possibility that the Germans could cling to the fragments that remained for more than a matter of hours. Cambrai, St. Quentin, La Fère, St. Gobain Forest, it seemed, might be engulfed by the tide of allied and American soldiers at any moment, although it may prove necessary to pass them for later occupation, as it has been the German practice to fill evacuated towns full of gas.

While the centre of immediate attention was the French sweep toward Laon, now in plain sight of General Mangin's men, who have cleared the wide plateau on the western end of the Chemiri-des-Dames and hurled the enemy down through the valley beyond, of even deeper significance is the continued swift progress of Pershing's forces along the heights of the Meuse and on a wide front to the west of the river.

To most observers, this thrust has the greatest potential menace for the enemy, and the whole titanic offensive now raging from Verdun to the North Sea is viewed as a single battle in which the Americans on the right are relied upon to carry forward a threat of such a nature that the enemy dare not linger in intermediate defense positions, but must make all haste back to the Belgian border or face the encirclement of a large part of his forces.

Germans' Secondary Line.

The probable immediate effort of the enemy, it was suggested, would be to get back his forces on the north to the first of the series of secondary defense positions he is known to have been building ever since Marshal Foch launched the surprise attack in the Marne salient in July. In a general way this line is supposed to lie parallel to the Hindenburg line for a long distance, and probably with its main fighting positions not more than ten miles or so behind the present front. The maintenance of that line, however, will depend on developments both north and south of its known extent, and the belief here is that there is no position short of the Belgian border that can be relied on certainly to block the wide flanking movement indicated by General Pershing's swift advance.

From every angle, the German high command appears to be faced with possibilities of crushing disasters. If, as is thought, the enemy leaders have already ordered a general withdrawal, the slightest hitch in arrangements would mean a section of the army cut off and annihilated. Marshal Foch has shown that he has available the forces to strike on any front or on all fronts simultaneously. This means that he can launch surprise drives at any weak link in the German chain as it gives ground and a break through at any point might develop into a rout.

FISTS ROUTED CAPTORS.

American Infantrymen, Tricked by a Ruse, Turn the Tables.

John S. Carlisle, one of the Y. M. C. A. secretaries with General Pershing's army, told an audience in the Bedford Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association yesterday afternoon how a detachment of American infantrymen, while they were being led prisoners to the German lines, suddenly turned on their captors and routed them with their fists.

"The Americans were part of a regiment composed mostly of Poles and Italians, stationed in a sector of the first line trenches near Verdun," said Mr. Carlisle. "They saw a group of soldiers in French uniforms approching them. The American boys there, accustomed to the uniform of the French soldier, did not suspect anything wrong with the visitors. One of the latter called out 'Gas,' and the Americans promptly donned their gas masks.

"At a signal from the commander of the visitors the American boys filed along the trench past them, supposing they were moving to a place of safety from a gas attack. Just as the last American was passing from his place he suspected a ruse, removed his gas mask and sniffed the air. When he did not find the odor of gas, he yelled to his companions: 'It's a fake!'

"The others tore off their masks, but they were already abreast of the visitors. They were disarmed and seized where they stood. They then discovered that the soldiers in French uniforms were a disguised raiding party of Germans. With their guns taken away from them the Americans were being marched across No Man's Land to the German lines, when a sergeant in khaki yelled: 'Give it to them with your fists, boys! Are you with me?'

When Mayor Hylan's neighbors made arrangements for a block party on Saturday night in Kossuth Place, between Broadway and Bushwick Avenues, Brooklyn, the work of decorating was handed over to Frederick J. Meyer of 1,199 Bushwick Avenue, who has done a good deal of that work for Liberty Loan and other war benefits free of charge. Mr. Meyer is also a member of the local draft board.

Desiring to string a row of flags across Bushwick Avenue a block from the Mayor's home, Mr. Meyer asked permission of Mrs. Anna Rehn of 856 Bushwick Avenue to make use of a window of her house. She refused, whereupon Meyer is said to have made remarks that were not relished by Mrs. Rehn.

Later, according to the story told in the Gates Avenue Police Court, where the trouble was aired yesterday, Mrs. Rehn's son, Frederick, hunted up Meyer and charged him with insulting his mother. Words led to blows, and Rehn is now laid up suffering from concussion of the brain, having struck his head on the pavement when he went down. Magistrate Folwell paroled Meyer under a charge of assault for examination on Oct. 4.

LATE LIEUT. BOOTH CITED.

American Mentioned by French as Pilot of Splendid Courage.

PARIS, Sept. 28.—Lieutenant W. Vernon Booth, Jr., of the American Flying Corps, was cited in the Journal Officiel today as a pilot of splendid courage.

"Seriously wounded during a fight with four enemy planes and his own plane on fire," says the citation, "he had the presence of mind, despite severe burns, to extinguish the fire and land between the lines forty yards from the enemy trenches. He set fire to his own airplane and regained the French line through a heavy gun and machine-gun fire."

Lieutenant Booth died in a Scottish hospital near the fighting front early in July from injuries suffered in a bomb explosion after an aerial combat over the German lines. The injuries necessitated the amputation of his leg. In Paris last April Lieutenant Booth was married to Miss Ethel Forgan, daughter of a Chicago financier.

WILSON ROSES IN HOSPITAL.

President and Wife Send Flowers and Best Wishes to Soldiers.

Before departing for Washington on Saturday morning the President and Mrs. Wilson, it was learned yesterday, sent a large bouquet of American Beauty roses to the 700 wounded American soldiers at the hospital on Ellis Island.

The flowers have been placed on a standard in the centre of the main ward where the men can all see them from their cots. On a card attached the President and Mrs. Wilson sent their best wishes for speedy recovery.

Drive Crowds Saw a Girl Drown.

A canoe carrying four persons overturned in the Hudson River off 190th Street yesterday and hundreds of persons walking along Riverside Drive saw Rose Franco, 14 years old, of 429 Tenth Street, West New York, drown before aid could reach her from shore. A man whose name was not obtained by the police swam to the overturned canoe and rescued Elizabeth Silvestri, 16 years old, of 114 Eighteenth Street, West New York. Two boys in the canoe reached shore safely.

Kultur's "Live Bait"

Those human beings in the little boat are live bait. With their desperately improvised flags they are drawing prey to the submarine zone. The cold glassy eye of a periscope comes up out of the water and circles and circles and circles with pitiless diligence. If no rescuer comes before the bait has died and ceased its attractive wavings, the submarine goes its way. Dead bait is almost worthless.

A Loaded Sledge

THIS picture from a photograph taken by Mr. J. M. Revillon on one of his inspection trips to the North, shows his guide and dog driver packing for a journey. A dog sledge must be packed for safety in any possible position, as it is likely to be turned over at least once a day. The guides are very skillful in preparing freight for a trip over ice-coated trails, and it is not often that a loaded sledge comes to harm.
